PREFACE.

serve to any considerable extent the purposes, ends and uses of genealogy. Such relations might be more appropriately called pedigrees or genealogical directories, as the names of Jones, or Brown or Robinson, as the case might be.

It has been said that such researches are futile because of the multiplicity and obscurity of the channels of ancestral influences. Within the period covered by this work every person living has had 64 ancestors (barring the intermarriage of cousins); therefore he inherits from any one of them but one sixty-fourth part of what he is.

The fallacy here is that a human being is the resultant of all his ancestors, like a chemical compound of so many ingredients of equal proportions or values. But what if we admit this proposition? The corollary is, instead of there being no reason, there are sixty-four reasons for the search; for on this theory the production of a man or woman of any desired pattern would be as simple as the compounding of a doctor's prescription, by mixing in due proportion the elements composing it. The law of heredity is indeed rare and universal, but its operations are for the most part inexplicable. Whence the diversity among children of the same parents, which makes each one a mystery to all the rest? How account for the anomaly of Napoleon—his gigantic intellect and dwarfish heart—among the progeny of Charles and Letitia Buonaparte? In what unexplored regions of genealogy shall we look for the springs and sources of Shakspeare's mighty genius? How explain that strange phenomenon called Atavism, which is forever playing hide and seek in human organisms, the recurrence of remarkable traits or peculiarities of remote ancestors, skipping over the intermediate generations, like those streams which sink into the earth, and, after hidden windings in subterranean channels, come to light again, far distant from their points of disappearance?*. Even so profound a thinker as Thomas Carlyle, confesses himself in the dark about these things when he says, in his Sartor Resartus, "In a psychological point of view it is, perhaps, questionable whether from birth and genealogy, how closely scrutinized soever, much insight is to be gained." It is a wise mother that knows her own child. Through this beneficent mystery of transmission, the birth of an infant in whatever grade of social life is the opening of a future of infinite possibilities, and parental hope and love and imagination may paint its future in the brightest colors without rebuke from reason.

It was our privilege, a few years since, to spend several days in delighted contemplation of Kensett's "Last Summer's Work." This consisted of a large number of oil paintings of landscapes, hung on the walls of the New York Academy of Design for exhibition preparatory to their sale by auction. In this study we became so familiar with the peculiar coloring and the general tone and spirit of the artist's productions, that ever since we have been able to point out a Kensett, when hung among other pictures, at a glance. In like manner the accumulation of a vast number of details concerning a great number of persons sprung from a common ancestor has stamped upon our mind the impression of certain physical, mental and moral qualities, either peculiar in themselves or in the force and energy of their manifestations. These qualities I call characteristics. It is unnecessary to do more than allude to them here. That the blood is or has been prolific is a matter of common observation. Joined to that is the quality of endurance. Some families increase but do not multiply; that is, many children are born, but few survive to maturity. Of William Tuttle's twelve children not one died young. The race is not only prolific, but is fitted to endure. It follows that wherever they have been long seated their descendants will be more numerous, as a rule, than those of other settlers of equal date. This is certainly true of New Haven. The fact is indicated in many ways. Of the 58 members of the 2d Co. of Governor's Guards, in 1775, 14 are found in this imperfect record. A similar proportion is found in the Church Manuals. Of the 12 to 16 officers and directors of the N. H. Col. Hist. Soc., usually about one-half are of this fold. So of the city banks and other prominent institutions. An accurate and well informed observer says that nearly every person in the rooms of the N. H. Col. Hist. Soc. at the fall reception of 1882 was of this family. A city directory of the "town born" of New Haven, or the Assessor's list of its tax-payers, with valuations annexed, compared with a complete record of resident descendants of William Tuttle, would be to many a surprising revelation in respect to comparative numbers, wealth and social position. It is said that from one-third to one-half of the taxable wealth of New Haven is in the hands of this family. In every association of prominent

*The theory of Darwin is that "geommules of innumerable qualities, derived from innumerable ancestral sources circulate in the blood and propagate themselves generation after generation. The vastly greater number remain undeveloped for want of favorable conditions and by reason of the overmastering of the more potent, in the struggle for points of attachment. Hence there is a vastly larger number of capabilities in every human being than ever had expression, and for every patent element there are countless latent ones—the latter counting for nought as to the individual."

PREFACE.

izens it is largely represented in numbers and influence, sometimes constituting a majority. For instance, while writing these lines we casually take up a pamphlet containing Dr. Bacon's Centennial discourse, dated 1879, and find a request for its publication, signed by forty-nine among the most influential of New Haven's worthies, of whom we recognize eighteen as of this lineage. At the funeral obsequies of the late Henry Farnam, four of the eight bearers were of Tuttle descent. A large number of similar facts might be cited. To some extent the same seems to be true as to Hartford. These things cannot be attributed to coincidence or chance; they are too many. At least one in twenty of all the graduates of Yale College, from its foundation to the present time, are akin in this line. In North Haven, Conn., of twenty-two deacons of the first church, from its foundation in 1716 to 1864, eleven, or one-half are of the family. In some branches, nine-tenths are church members, and so general is the religious inclination that I set it down as a family trait.

It seems to be the order of nature that to those who have much, much shall be added, and those who have little, the little they have shall be taken away. To virility, strength and excellence of physical organization is added energy in the males and beauty in the females, with their usual concomitants of successful undertakings and early marriages. Energy is nervous force or intensity which is said to be the secret of family distinction. Self-reliance, courage and straightforwardness are the breathings of persons happily so constituted. To be weak is to be miserable; deceit, hypocrisy, and intrigue are too often the resources of the feeble.

Honesty in its broader and deeper signification is the rarest virtue under the sun. The lantern of Diogenes, misunderstood as the cynicism of a sour philosopher, is in reality a symbol of the peering, longing search of man for the noblest work of God. Still this virtue is not so scarce as it may seem to common experience and observation. Away from the struggles of crowded populations, the competitions and tricks of trade, and the corrupting atmosphere of cities, hidden beneath the surface of human character, it exists in threads and veins, and sometimes shows itself in patines of bright gold. No very deep insight is requisite to recognize the same spiritual quality in the payment of a penny fare [p. 271]; the selling of a cow [p. 491]; the fidelity of art to truth and nature [p. 477] and in the "honest method" of that sublime argument, "The Freedom of the Will" [p. 383]. Said the clerk of a large Connecticut town to the writer: "The Tuttles are honest; they give good measure." It has seemed to us that this virtue has been largely developed in this race. Under favorable circumstances, now fast giving way before the march of human progress, and the changing conditions of social life, this quality has been handed down in some lines from father to son for many generations, until it has ceased to be a virtue by becoming a second nature.

It is surprising to note how many families owe their collected or their published records, wholly or in large part, to persons of Tuttle lineage or affinity. Of these are the Dwights, the Edwards, the Strongs, the Wetmores, the Chaunceys, the Townsends, the Dawsons, the Trowbridges, the Coghills, the Hughes, the Atwaters, the Reads, the Seymours, the Fowlers, the Bronsons, the Days, the Dickermans, the Notts, the Doolittles, the Yales, the Wolcotts, the Bidwells, the Andrews, the Harts, the Mulfords, the Mansfields, the Todds, the Humphreys, the Burrs, and perhaps others that we cannot now recall, suggestive of a paraphrase to Fuller's saying that "in other countries men are made Heralds, but in Wales they are born Heralds."

Not to particularize further, it may be as well to give a general description of the Welsh character as a summary of what we desire to say on this point. Devonshire (the source of the New England Tuttles) is more Welsh than Wales itself in the distinctive peculiarities of its people. The statistics of crime in Great Britain show that one Welshman to ten English and fifteen Irish are convicted of crime. They are strongly emotional, poetical and religious. "The Welsh nature," says Prof. Green in his History of the English People "is steeped in poetry." It appears in the national festival of the Eisteddfod, and in a romantic literature which has leavened the imagination of Western Europe. In the old time, "in every house, strangers who arrived in the morning were entertained till even-tide with the talk of maidens and the music of the harp. "They are a nation of singers. Almost everyone sings. In their own country (Wales) they are born Calvinists. In foreign lands they maintain their homogeneity as tenaciously as Jews. The Welsh miners of Pennsylvania hold annual musical contests, in which harmonies are heard that might astonish some people who imagine that the only light of their sunless toil is the miner's lamp. The brief summary of Miss Blakeman in her History of Susquehanna Co. is as follows: "They," the Welsh people of that country "are very respectable and well to do, religious, musical, all readers, many teachers and college graduates, no Roman Catholics, emotional, poetical, practical, stable, temperate, industrious and honest."

Now the question arises, that inasmuch as such "characteristics" are common more or less to all families, how can they be ascribed to one ancestor more than another in any given case? We answer, let us suppose that all the families in which the children of William Tuttle or his more remote descendants married were written up. We should then have a basis for comparison. If it were found on such comparison that the branches of such families as were of Tuttle descent exhibited more of these characteristics, or exhibited them more decidedly or more generally than those branches of such families as were not of Tuttle descent, then it seems to us a fair inference that such characteristics were inherited from or through the Tuttle ancestor. Now so far as we have the material for comparison, in the published genealogies of the Wells, Chaunceys, Edwards, Dwights, Trowbridges and others, likenesses do appear in the branches of Tuttle descent that are not found to the same extent in the others. And the inference derived from such likeness is strengthened by apparent diversities and contrasts between the Tuttle branches and the others. We do not intend to pursue the comparison; we merely suggest it as furnishing ground for a reasonable probability, and as the foundation in part of our own conclusion in regard to the above inquiry, deduced from a vast array of facts that have come under our observation in the compilation of this work. Our conclusion is that the characteristics referred to, are more clearly and decidedly traceable to the Tuttle stock than to any other.

It is plain that somewhere along the ancestral lines of this strain of blood a remarkable energy has been infused that has shown itself in every form of human activity and achievement. In theology it produced an Edwards; among educators a Dwight and a Woolsey; in art, a Kensett; in literature, a Peter Parley. It learned all languages in the sweat and grime of the blacksmith's forge, in Burritt. It marched to the sea with Sherman. It wrote histories with the half-blind eyes of Prescott. The books it has written would fill a large library. Its memorial windows and tablets are seen wherever genius and piety are so recognized; and in perhaps more than one instance it has changed the spirit of a weak and helpless woman as in Chloe Lankton, bed-ridden, and pain-racked for many a long and weary year, into something so sublime and beautiful in spiritual strength and grace, as almost to revive our old faith in the reality of heavenly winged visitants. We do not pretend to account for it. The history of families in this respect is analogous on a small scale and within narrow limits to that of nations; for instance, a little knot of men on the banks of the Tiber, energised from some unknown or unseen source, build Rome, and all men became Romans. This energy is called patriotism or love of country. It was an intense and entire devotion to one idea. Those who were absorbed in it were elevated, expanded, strengthened, renewed by it as by a divine afflatus, and the Roman citizen became the type of a nobler manhood than the world had yet seen. It was a new birth. So the religious disposition being heritable and cumulative, may become as pure and absorbing in families as Roman patriotism was in its best days, and far more powerful in its formative and in its active influences. The world is not only governed by ideas but it is shaped by them.

A remarkable feature in our family history, as it would be in any other, is the branch of Elizabeth. It is an interesting genealogical study. Both the parents were of the same Welsh race. There is evidence that the mother had the nervous, sensitive and excitable temperament of genius. Richard Edwards, being an only child, inherited ample means and gave his children the best education the country afforded. To educate is to bring out, and to train, it cannot create talents or character. The ministerial profession was then almost the only field for the employment of able and educated men. So all things conspired to favor the natural bent of their son Timothy. The process was continued, and in the next generation reached its highest development in his son Jonathan. From the very beginning this branch has been noted for its high regard for education, its scholarly culture, and its religious disposition. It is said to include a larger number of eminent persons than have sprung from any other one of the New England founders. It is wonderful, says a late writer, how much of the grace and culture of American society has sprung from this root. The same pursuits continued generation after generation in the same families, originally set apart by nature for a chosen work, has resulted in a heritage of confirmed aptitudes, enlarged natural capacities, delicacy and refinement of physical organization, manners, sentiments and tastes; a sort of "Brahmin Caste in New England," as Dr. Holmes put it, of which the Edwards family form a considerable proportion, and in which it holds a high rank. The same is true, perhaps, to an equal extent of the branch of Hannah. In most of the others the conditions were not so favorable, and the natural tendencies were more or less overlaid, checked or diverted at the outset by the hard necessities incident to life in a new country. They are therefore all the more striking when they do appear as showing the force of the original bent in the face of adverse antecedents and circumstances.

Parton, in his Life of Aaron Burr, notices the singular predominance of the feminine element in this stock. Of the seven children of Richard Edwards by the Tuttle mother, six were girls. Of the eleven children of his son, Timothy Edwards, ten were girls. Of the eleven children of his son, Jonathan, eight were girls. The order of nature as to the numerical equality of the sexes were subverted by some strong hereditary force. It was also manifested in a superior delicacy of organization. The phrenologist tells us, says Parton, that Burr had the temperament of a woman. The biographer of Major Winthrop speaks of "the womanly delicacy of his character." It seems evident enough that this and other peculiarities came from the Tuttle blood, for the six children of Richard Edwards, by his second wife, Mary Talcott, were all boys but one, and though they received the same advantages of education as the children of the Tuttle mother, they and their descendants did not manifest those peculiar traits and energies that have made the name of Edwards famous in New England, and when the Edwards family is named the posterity of the Tuttle mother is understood.

We have called attention to this point on account of a remarkable claim that has been set up in favor of the Stoddards as the source of the excellencies of the Edwards race. It probably originated in the natural partiality of Mrs. Edwards for her father's family, when her son Jonathan became famous. It was tea-table gossip in East Windsor in her life-time, and came down as a tradition. Dr. Sereno E. Dwight found it there when inquiring among the old people for materials for his Life of Edwards, and put it in his book as a tradition. It was taken up, in the Stoddard Genealogy, and, if we remember, repeated in the second edition with the Downings admitted to a share of the honor. It appeared again in a book notice in the N. Y. Evening Post. In an essay and review in the New Englander, it was reiterated in still more decided terms, and finally the Rev. B. W. Dwight, whose estimable genealogical labors do honor to his Welsh heritage of blood, formulated in the following terms, and published it in his Dwight Genealogy:

"The children of Mary Edwards were widely noted for fine forms and features, which came (tradition says) from the Edwards lineage, and to them from the Stoddards. They (Timothy Edward's children) inherited their clear, fine, expressive features from their mother (Esther Stoddard), taking their physical and in a great degree their mental proportions from her. Her son Jonathan was nearly six feet high, and her ten daughters used sometimes to be spoken of as Mr. Edwards' sixty feet of daughters, exaggerated, though all were remarkably tall." Again, "The propelling force of the Dwights comes from the Edwards connection, also the personal beauty, tradition says, and the personal beauty comes to the Edwards from the Stoddards."

This statement, though qualified by "tradition says," has been largely accepted as authoritative, the qualification being overlooked or disregarded. As a worthless tradition not only without foundation in fact, but as contradicted by fact and inference, as we will try presently to show, it would not be noticed here but for the reason that it has been received with credit by many who usually require a reason for their faith, and has caused us some embarrassment and disappointment. If the tradition is true then we are committing a sort of larceny in placing the Edwards in our record. If it is not true then it is our duty to reclaim and recover if possible the stolen goods.

In offering our objections to the conclusions involved in the statement of Dr. Dwight we must not be understood as intending any disparagement of the Stoddard family, or of the mother of Jonathan Edwards, though comparisons have been made, not in the best taste and unwisely as we think between the father and mother of that eminent man. The mother of Edwards may have been a "very smart" and a very beautiful woman, but apart from the tradition, we have and can have no positive knowledge of the "mental proportions, the propelling force or the personal beauty" which her daughters are presumptively said to have inherited largely from her. While as to the father, his sixty years of ministerial life and labor afford abundant means of judging. Nor can we overlook the opinion of President Chauncey who said that he had read all the writings of the Rev. Solomon Stoddard (father of Mrs. Edwards) and thought that his abilities had been "much overrated."

The real question, however, is not one of smartness or comparative ability, but of likeness, or of kind. Not how great or how much, but of what nature. Are there such similarities or idiosyncracies as to justify the Stoddard claim? We think not. The Stoddards are English. The Edwards are Welsh. A distinction that centuries of

For the fine McClellan portraits we are indebted to the McClellan brothers; to the generosity of Mrs. and the Misses Strickland, for that of Elihu Burritt; for that of William Tuttle, and in part for that of Pres. Tuttle, to J. N. Tuttle, Esq., of Newark, N. J.; to Hon. Payne Pettibone, for that portrait; to A. A. Marks, for his picture, and to the family of Hon. Hiland Hall for the fine engraving of himself.

And now, grateful for the courtesy with which, almost without exception, my inquiries have been received and answered, and retaining very pleasant memories of personal interviews, hospitalities and epistolary favors, I lay down, at least for a time, with a sense of relief, my arduous, though self-imposed and gratuitous task.

to defray the incidental expenses of the committee. This it did fully and something over, as we are informed, but we are not able to present figures, having had nothing to do with that part of the matter.

The second meeting was held in September, 1874, at Railroad Grove, in West Haven, and was even more numerously attended than the first. A huge clam-bake was served up, to pay for which, voluntary contributions were taken, amounting, with subsequent collections, to nearly $500, as we were informed on the best authority. It seems to have been a very expensive and a very unsatisfactory affair all round.

In February, of the present year (1883) Mr. S. G. Davidson of Bethany, Conn., took the initiative for a third meeting, which was held at High Rock Grove, on the Nangatuck R. R., Aug. 15, 1883. Four passenger cars, chartered by Mr. Davidson to convey the people from New Haven, were all filled to overflowing, and two more cars were added to the train by the R. R. Company, which were also filled. By chartering the cars 30 cents was saved to each passenger, the regular excursion fare being 90 cents. There were no general expenses to provide for, the use of the grove being given by the R. R. Co. and the programmes being furnished by our publishers—Tuttle & Co. of Rutland. Thanks are due to Mr. Davidson for his successful management of the affair.

I refer to these money matters because many persons find it difficult to conceive how a man in his right mind can voluntarily assume such a task as I have partly accomplished, without a prospect or a hope of pecuniary recompense. To such persons all self-sacrifice is a mystery, if it is not a folly. It is my duty to say in self-defense, that in this connection I have not received a dollar excepting in the instances named below; not that I should be blameworthy if I had, considering that I have spent in this work upwards of $500 for postage stamps and stationery alone, but the truth should be known. Except for the purpose of tracing the English pedigree I have never asked for such aid, and in the earlier stages would have declined it had it been offered, determined that this labor should be free, even in appearance, from the taint of Mammon-worship. Latterly, however, my available resources have been much crippled, and I should have been glad, for the book's sake, of more help. At different times during the last fourteen years I have received (all unasked) $25 from the late Samuel B. Tuttle of Goshen, Conn., $10 from the late H. B. Tuttle of Cleveland, O., $5 from the late Daniel Tuttle, then of Burnside, Conn., and $1 from David Tuttle of Springvale, Pa., $5 from W. T. Rigby, Esq., of Clear Water, Minn., and the same amount from Hon. Payne Pettibone of Wyoming, Pa.; in all $51. To this should be added the gift from Thomas R. Trowbridge, Esq., of New Haven, of the Trowbridge Genealogy; from Joseph N. Tuttle, Esq., of Newark, N. J., the Newark Centennial; from Hon. Payne Pettibone, of the Wyoming Centennial; from Hon. Hiland Hall of North Bennington, Vt., his own History of Vermont and several pamphlets; from A. Bronson Alcott of Concord, his New Connecticut; from Mrs. Strickland and the Misses Strickland of New Britain, Conn., The Andrews Memorial, The Hart Genealogy and the History of New Britain; from Rev. E. E. Atwater of New Haven, the Atwater Genealogy; from Dea. Edmund Tuttle, the Hubbard pamphlet; from Capt. Charles H. Townsend, the Townsend Genealogy and several pamphlets; from Pres. Tuttle of Wabash College, the Life of William Tuttle; from Rev. Samuel Orcutt, the History of Wolcott, and from A. W. Bruen, Esq., two copies of the American reprint of the Life of John Bruen, all of which were gratefully received.

EXPLANATIONS.

ABBREVIATIONS.—b., born; bap., baptized; d., died; m., married; wf., wife; w., widow; f., father; s., son; dau., daughter; cous., cousin; sis., sister; bro., brother; mo., mother; gr. dau., granddaughter; gr. s., grandson; unm., unmarried; chil., children; chh., church; s. i., sans issue, or without children; desc., descendant; res., residence or resided; rem., removed; bu., buried; rt., right; conv., conveyed; est., estate.

When the name of a town or locality is repeated in the same paragraph the initial letter only is used.

Other abbreviations, if not such as are in common use, will be understood in connection with the context.

ARRANGEMENT.—The general arrangement is in lines—all the descendants of the eldest child being given first, followed by the next eldest and so on. This might be termed the vertical plan, in distinction to the arrangement by generations, or horizontally in strata or layers of generations. The lineal or vertical method was found the most convenient in the actual work of compilation, besides possessing other advantages, such as economy of space, less repetition and greater facility of tracing descents. The arrangement by generations involves the necessity of turning over the leaves of the whole book to trace any given line, while by the lineal plan every line is comprised within the compass of a few consecutive pages. It is, perhaps, not assuming too much to call the lineal the natural arrangement.

To reduce repetition and the scattering of families to the minimum, the final paragraphs in the record of a line are made to include as much as possible without confusion or overtaxing the attention. The clear and open arrangement by offsets is the best for this purpose; but after setting up sixteen pages in this way it was found impracticable on account of space. Instead of indicating the children, grandchildren, etc., by offsets, it is done more compactly by varying the type—names of children in Roman; grandchildren in SMALL CAPITALS; great-grand-children in italics; great-great-grand-children by reversion to the common type, and great-great-great-grand-children by enclosing their numbers in parentheses. Example, p. 176:

37. Caleb Tuttle had:

- I. Sarah, (record fully given, p. 177.
- II. Caleb, " " " "
- III. Thomas. (As his record would be so long as to disrupt the list of Caleb's children, and too involved in itself, it is dropped, to be taken up on the next page under the number 373.)

IV. James, record fully given.

V. Enos, had:

1, ENOS. 2, DEBORAH, m. John Bradley and had:

1, Alathia. 2, John.

3, MARY. 4, ESTHER. 5, PHEBE, m. Elijah Osborn and had:

1, Eli. 2, Enos.

It will be seen by referring to the text that the children and grand-children of Enos follow in the same consecutive order as in the example. This is the key to the whole arrangement.

NUMBERING.—The system was devised by Rev. Dr. John E. Todd [p. 90], and is here used, by his permission, for the first time in any publication. It was adopted by the compiler as the simplest and best known to him. It obviates the cumbrous serials hitherto deemed essential, and each number serves the purpose not only of identification, but is also a genealogical history of the person to whose name it is attached. Example—On page 1, John Tuttle is the first child of William; his number is 1 throughout the genealogy. On the same page is a list of his children, of whom Samuel was the 3d; this number, placed on the right of his father's number, is 13. On pages 24 and 25 are Samuel's children, of whom the 6th is Josiah, which makes his number 136. On page 36 are Josiah's children, of whom the 4th is Jehiel; his number is 1364. On page 37 are Jehiel's children, of whom the 1st is Isaiah, whose numbering is 13641. In recapitulation we have:

|        |         |              |           |
|--------|---------|--------------|-----------|
| 1.     | John,   | 1st child of | William.  |
| 13.    | Samuel, | 3d           | " John.   |
| 136.   | Josiah, | 6th          | " Samuel. |
| 1364.  | Jehiel, | 4th          | " Josiah. |
| 13641. | Isaiah, | 1st          | " Jehiel. |

That is to say: Isaiah Tuttle was the 1st child of the 4th child of the 6th child of the 13th child of the 1st child of William Tuttle, as represented by the number 13641 on the left of his name. The same plan is pursued throughout, whether the line of descent is through male progenitors, as in the above instance, or female, or made up of both. When the number of children exceeds 9 the two figures composing the number are enclosed between two periods, as on page 501, Lucius Tuttle, No. 923.10., being the 10th child of Ephraim, 923.

To trace any line back, discard the first figure on the right and look along the left hand side of the page for the number that remains. The next link is found in the same manner by discarding the right hand figure.

The numbering of each genealogy forms a separate system by itself, having no connection with the rest.

The numbers in brackets with p. refer to the page. Other numbers in brackets refer to the branch in which related matter may be found, as [1], branch of John; [2], branch of Hannah, etc.

A slight mistake was made by the draftsman in the drawing of the Tothill Arms. The Crest, instead of resting on the Shield, should be raised above it and separated by a slight interval.

In regard to dates, the difference between the old and the new style is now so generally understood as to need no explanation. The dates prior to 1752 are old style, for the most part.

summed up in the command to love God supremely and our neighbor as ourself, for, correlated to great intellectual vigor and emotional intensity of constitution are certain perils, the consciousness of which should be ever present as a warning against the promptings of ambition, selfishness and passion. Integrity, cheerfulness and moderation are great conservators; but the only sure safeguard is a sincere religious faith. Without this no high development of manhood or of womanhood, of strength or of beauty, can be attained nor long maintained.

The work is not as complete as we desired to make it. We had prepared a considerable list of books to be consulted, letters of inquiry to be written and record hunting tours to be made for the purpose of tracing lines that so far have eluded our search. We desired also to procure documentary proofs of the Devonshire origin of the New England Turtles, their parentage, antecedents, relationships, pedigrees, etc. Of the fact of such origin itself, we feel assured from circumstantial evidence which seems as strong as such evidence ever can be. Some correspondence to this end was had with a learned member of the Harleian Society of London. He confirmed our views and stated the cost of getting copies of the needed records at $125 at the outside. After several vain attempts to get assistance we left the matter in abeyance, hoping that some enabling circumstance or state of things would "turn up" "in the sweet by and by." In the meantime we continued our efforts in other directions. No serious difficulty would be met, it is likely, in tracing the pedigree back several generations. Bernard Quaritch of London advertised the Genealogical Manuscripts of the Devonshire Tothills in his Catalogue of June 15, 1859. The family, or a branch of it, as early as 1591, had long been seated at Exeter, whose parish registers are among the earliest in the Kingdom, beginning 1535.

While these things remained undone we felt reluctant to publish, but finally, as the work had been long expected and impatiently waited for, as the materials already gathered and arranged were more than sufficient to fill a large octavo volume, as they had been twice in jeopardy by fire and might at any time be irremediably lost by some unforeseen casualty, and mindful of the deepening shadows that gather around even the brightest pathway at our time of life, we came to the sudden conclusion, about the 1st of January, 1882, to print the book at once. We were enabled to do so by availing ourself of an offer by Tuttle & Co. of Rutland, Vt., made many years since, to publish it at their own risk. Not a line or word of written contract has ever passed between us; but as we pen these closing paragraphs a nearly complete copy of the work lies before us and it is our simple duty to say that they have generously and nobly fulfilled their task. To our subscribers it will speak for itself. If we are spared, and the opportunity is given us, we propose to print, in due time, a small supplementary octavo, containing additions and corrections, and we shall be glad to receive the same from any source whatever. Communications directed to our present address will reach us wherever we may be.

In view of the popularity of our family gatherings and the advantages that accrue from combined or associated effort, we here propose a permanent organization of descendants, to take charge of the arrangements for future meetings and to further such objects as may properly come under their supervision.

We beg pardon for the poor sketch or notice of Chloe Lankton, whom we regard as one of the most beautiful and interesting characters in our book. While we were preparing a more adequate account, in the Summer of 1882, we were disabled for several weeks by a severe accident. When sufficiently recovered to resume work, an accumulation of unanswered letters and other pressing affairs absorbed our time and attention until it was too late for its introduction. In relation to other faults and shortcomings we ask not that they be overlooked, but as far as may be, corrected and remedied, and that our work, as a whole, may be accepted by those whom it chiefly concerns, in a spirit rather of thankfulness for whatever in it is worthy, than of censoriousness for its failures.

To those who have aided in gathering materials, credit is given in the body of the work. If any are omitted, it is through oversight, for which I ask pardon. An especial acknowledgment is due, and is here cheerfully paid to Dea. Edmund Tuttle of West Meriden, Conn., who, in the early stages, helped me far more than anyone else in collecting what might be termed the contemporaneous genealogy of the family, by interviewing and corresponding with descendants, copying Bible records, grave-stone inscriptions, etc., in his own and adjoining towns. He also co-operated actively in getting up and arranging the first family meeting.* We are also indebted to Prof. Charles H.

contact and intercourse between the two races living under a common government have not been able to efface.

Of the Downings we know very little, but can safely say that Edwards was extremely unlike Sir George. But let us look at the matter a little more closely as to resemblances.

"A pious disposition," says Galton, "is certainly inherited."

"When a boy," says Jonathan Edwards, "I was exercised and concerned about my soul and was abundant in religious duties." Sarah Pierpont, afterwards his wife, became truly pious when not more than five years of age.

The mother of Edwards, strange to say, did not join the church nor make profession of religion until she was forty-four years of age; and this though the daughter of one clergyman, the wife of another, and living in an era and in a community of general church membership. In fact, the maternal influence usually so strong in shaping and directing the plastic mind of childhood, seems to have been to some extent inoperative in the family of Timothy Edwards, the father himself assuming the instruction and mental training of the children, and in his absence, Jonathan and the younger girls reciting to their elder sisters. So far then we may assert that wherever their mental proportions may have come from, their religious tendencies and mental training plainly did not come from their mother.

If we go back another generation to Rev. Solomon Stoddard we find incongruities and contrasts still more marked and decided. He maintained that the Lord's supper is a converting ordinance, and that all baptised persons not scandalous in life may lawfully approach the table, though they know themselves to be destitute of true religion; and this dangerous innovation so fatal to the purity of the church, he did more than any one else to uphold and defend. To Edwards, so profoundly earnest and sincere, this doctrine and practice could not be otherwise than hateful. He opposed it strenuously and suffered bitter persecution, rather than connive at it. This difference was simply an outward sign of an inward spiritual incongruity. Every man is born a Calvinist, an Arminian or what not, and his nature more or less modified by circumstances and education is supreme, and stamps itself on his opinions, and expresses itself in his life and influence. The comparative effects of the preaching of Stoddard and of Edwards is a further illustration of this law. The sleepy religion, in baneful fellowship with the wide-awake worldliness of the Northampton church as Edwards found it, aroused and startled by his vehement spirit and his "awful words" shook off the unnatural alliance, broke up the hollow truce, ceased the unseemly masquerade, and grasping the old weapons of its warfare, resumed the conflict. Henceforth its victories were seen in numerous revivals. Such a power could not be confined to the narrow limits of a single parish. It went forth conquering and to conquer. It spread far and wide throughout New England, crossed the ocean into foreign lands and made itself felt to the farthest bounds of protestant Christendom. This was "the great awakening." We see here a marked resemblance to his father Edwards, as Jonathan himself declared, that he knew of no church in Western New England, excepting his own, in which revivals had been so frequent as in his father's. On the other hand, how wide the contrast to the ministerial character and influence of his grandfather Stoddard. They were akin, but not of a kind. Edwards was not an offshoot, but a graft on the Stoddard family tree. "By their fruits shall ye know them."

We cannot therefore be accused of presumption or of arrogance, in claiming for the Tuttle connection a part at least of the "nervous force" and the controlling religious tendencies of the Dwights and the Edwards, for such traits are as sharply defined and as traceable as any peculiarity of physical conformation. The question as to mental proportions and personal beauty is too vague for discussion. The fact itself, of the beauty of the Stoddards, seems like the other part of the statement to rest on tradition or on mere assumption. The comparatively late marriages of most of the daughters of Rev. Solomon Stoddard seems to point to a different conclusion. "Anyway it is of no importance in this connection, for the terms "personal beauty" are so widely applicable as to include every type of the human race, and if we accept as a fact (of which, however, we can have no definite knowledge) Dr. Dwight's description of the style of beauty, "the clear, fine, expressive features" of Timothy Edwards' daughters, it points rather to the nervous and intellectual Welsh constitution, than to the easy going, brawny, full-fed and full-blown English.

According to the deductions of Galton and others from the study of genealogical facts and hereditary forces we may anticipate from the same strain of blood other minds and characters of exceptional power and dignity in the future whenever the necessary conditions shall exist. These conditions are partly under the control of man, and are

NAME.

Names and surnames, their origin and signification, have been the subject of much speculation and research. In early times an individual had but one name, and that probably a word descriptive of some personal peculiarity, as Long, Short, White, Black, etc. As population increased, the requirements for new and distinctive names multiplied, and occupations, trades, natural objects and almost everything else, have been pressed into the service. For the most part these are sufficiently indicative of their origin to enable any one to classify under appropriate heads a large proportion of all the surnames he has ever seen or can remember.

The primitive custom of adding the father's name to the son's, by way of distinction, continued among the Welsh long after surnames had become general among the commonalty of the rest of Britain, and so it happened that the common Christian names of Edward, William, Robert, Richard, etc., enter so largely into the family nomenclature of that people. They also extended it so as to include more or less of their pedigree or paternal lineage—a custom which Fuller illustrates in his quaint and humorous style as follows: "Thomas ap. William—ap. Thomas—ap. Richard—ap. Howell—ap. Evan Vaughn, Esq., was born of ancient and worshipful parentage at Morton, in Flintshire in the reign of Henry, VIII, (1509-1547). This gentleman, being called at the panel of the jury by the aforesaid names, and many more, was advised by the judge for brevity's sake to contract his name. So he called himself Morton."

This example was followed by other gentry of Wales, who, leaving their pedigree at home, carry only one surname abroad with them, whereby much time, especially in winter when the days are short, is saved for other employment."

The higher ranks were the first to adopt surnames. In France, about the end of the tenth century, the barons began the custom by taking the names of their estates, and this is the general origin of family names among the nobility of Europe. The oldest surnames in England are the names of places in Normandy. Surnames so derived are classed as "Place Names."

Localities named Tothill or Tuthill are still numerous in Great Britain. A late writer in the London Notes and Queries says: "I wonder how many Tothills are now left in England? Tuthill, near Thetford, Norfolk Co., has been so called from the time of the great battle there between Edward the Martyr and the Danes, A. D. 871.

Toothill, also called Beacon Hill, near Caernarvon Castle.

Toothill or Tothill Fields, a large tract on the south-west side of Westminster. It comprised the land between Tothill street, Pimlico and the river Thames. "An uncertain boundary," says Jeremy Bentham. It adjoined Westminster Abbey and was once within the limits of the sanctuary of that house. Stow says: "From the entry into Tothill field, Tuttle street is called Petty France."

In Nichol's account of receiving the Queen in the College Church of Westminster on the first day of Parliament, Oct. 13, 1597, it is referred to as follows: "Toothill street, lying in the west part of the Citie, taketh name of a hill near it, which is called Tootehill, in the great field near the street."—Progresses of Queen Elizabeth. In an ancient lease it is called Toothill. Often named by Stow in his Survey of London, under the varying forms of Tothill, Toothill and Tuttle. In 1248, Stow says Henry I considered the expediency of granting a fifteen day's annual fair to the Abbot of Westminster, to be held at Tuthill or Tothill (now Tothill Fields) during which time all trade should cease within the city. Again, he says: "In the time of Edward I, (1272-1307) a freshet in the Thames River overflowed at Tothyll as Matthew of Westminster reporteth."

In time of Henry III it was possessed as a manor by John Maunsel, a priest and King's Counsel, who afterwards became Lord Chancellor of England. Here he entertained (1256) the King and Queen of England, the King and Queen of Scotland, Prince Edward (afterward Edward I.) and a great number of the nobility, knights and bishops. The house not being large enough large tents were used.

On the 25th of Aug., 1651, the London and Westminster trained bands drew out into Tuttle's Fields, in all about 14,000. The Speaker and divers members of Parliament went there to see them.

At Tutbury in Stafford Co. are the ruins of a castle built by one of the Kings of Mercia, and re-built by John of Gaunt, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, was confined 1569-70, and again, 1584-86. There is also a Norman church or Priory, founded in 1070.

Totnes is the most ancient town in the kingdom. It stands on the river Dart, in Devon, and consists principally of one long street; some of the houses having piazzas, while the upper stories project considerably over the lower. The Castle, the keep of which is still in tolerable preservation, is a large, circular, turreted building, standing on an immense artificial mound, from which the town and castle derive their name.

Toothill in Yorkshire is a remarkable round topt hill, near which there lived a flourishing family nearly seven hundred years ago, the first of whom was Richard de Toothill, who took his surname from the name of this place. It is plain that other families, widely separated in point of locality and in ethnological derivation—Saxon, Celt or Norman, might, under similar circumstances, assume the same name, and as a matter of history, it does appear as a surname at a very early date in different parts of the country.

The first name on the roll of Battle Abbey (1066) is Toteles.

In 1230 John le Harpur de Wakefield and Eleanor, his wife, granted to Thomas de Toothill an annual rent of 8 s. which said Thomas had recovered in 1230 from William, son of Adam del Lee, in Old Linley (Halifax) Yorkshire.

In 1287 Isabel Scott and Alice, her daughter, granted lands in Rastrick (Yorkshire) to John de Toothill, whose descendants are afterwards called de Totehill.

Of the same family was Hugh de Tothill and Joan, his wife, who had grant of the Manor of Brighouse for their lives (1349) and John de Totehill, their younger son, after their decease.

They held lands in fee both in Fixby and Rastrick. The Manor of Toothill is described as "Manrium de Toothill, in Villa de Rastrick in 1332, and Sir Wm. de Beaumont granted to Thomas de Totehill and Wm., his son, the moiety of the town of Fekisby (Fixby) with wards, marriages, etc.

In Devonshire "John Gifford held Acket of Alice de Tothill in 1292."

In an old church at Redenhall, Norfolk Co., an inscription still exists: "In 1464 Richard Totyrl or Tuthill was buried in this church."—Bloomfield.

The Norfolkshire Tuthills were seated at Saxlingham. William Tuthill of that manor married Susan, daughter of Peter Osborn of Chicksands Abbey. Sir John Osborn, son of Sir Peter, was ancestor of Sir Danvers Osborn, Gov. of N. Y., 1754. Dorothy Osborn, who, says Macauley, "was besieged by as many lovers as were drawn to Belmont by the fame of Portia," among them Henry Cromwell, brother of Oliver, was granddaughter of Sir John. She married Sir Wm. Temple.

An inscription in the Chancel of the same church, to "The loving wife of Roger Dallyson, son and heir apparent to William Dallyson of Laughton, Lincoln Co., Esq." She was daughter and heiress of William Tuthill of Newton, Gent, and Elizabeth his wife, and died Sept. 27, 1585, in the 19th year of her age. A brass plate (now lost) was inscribed, "Here lyeth the body of William Tuttle, gent, who endeth this life, 28th of March, 1591." He was born at Saxlingham and married the daughter of Mr. Woolsey of Norwich, by whom he had only one daughter, who married Roger Dallyson. Of this family, shown by arms confirmed to him, was William Tothill, Esq., of the Manor of Tuthill in Cambridgeshire, father of Francis, son and heir of William, who had

"In the History of Hulfar by Rev. John Watson are some further details in relation to the Yorkshire branch, the first of whom was Richard de Tothill, named above. He had sons Thomas, Matthew and Richard. Matthew had lands in the graveship of Hipperholm, in 1314, and was witness to a deed in 1337. He had John, who lived at Silkeley, and who had Hugh (a witness to deeds in 1438) and John de Tothill, which Hugh had Thomas.

Thomas, eldest son of the first Richard, married Modesta. Thomas, above named, had by Modesta, William, Hugh, John and three daughters.

William de Tothill, son of Thomas, married Sibyl, daughter and heiress of Thomas de Fekisby. By this Sibyl he had Margaret, his daughter and heiress, who being in her minority at the time of her father's death, was in the custody or wardship of Earl Warren (John de Warren, Earl of Surrey).

This Margaret married Richard de Thornhill, in the time of Edward III and carried all her father's estates into that family, where they still continue. And is said to have had the lands of Isabel, relict of John Scot, and her daughters. Now, it appears from several deeds, that about 1287, this Isabel and her daughters granted to one John de Tothill, certain lands in Rastrick, called Linlands; his name is omitted in the above pedigree, and it is no further certain who he was, than that Thomas was his heir, and that his name occurs in deeds before and after 1300. Most of these descents are proved from deeds belonging to Thomas Thornhill, Esq., of Fixby, in which William, son of Anabil de Rastrick and Ellen, his wife, daughter of John Scot, with Alice, her sister, grant lands to Thomas de Tothill, for his life, and after his decease, to William, son of the said Thomas, and if William died without issue, to John, son of the said Thomas, and for default of issue in the said John, to all his sisters. As Hugh is not mentioned here, he probably was dead; but his existence is proved in 1331 by a deed wherein Thomas de Tothill grants to William de Tothill and his heirs, remainder to John, brother of said William, remainder to Hugh, brother of said John, remainder to sisters of said Hugh."—Hon. W. H. Tuthill's Address.

Arms of Tothill of Tothill: Or, on a Chevron Sable, three Crescents Argent.

Lysons, in his History of Cambridgeshire, says the Manor of Totehill or Totehall, in the parish of Swaffham Prior, was so called from an ancient family of that name, and is supposed to have passed to Co-heiresses in 1439. The coat of arms of the family upon a monument still remaining in one of the churches of the parish, is, "Argent, on a Chevron Azure, three Crescents, Argent."

From the similarity of arms it would appear that all these families were identical in origin.

The late Hon. W. H. Tuthill in the address quoted above, copies from a letter of Mrs. Louisa C. Tuttle [p. 166] in which she gives an account of a visit made by her husband to Sir George L. Tuthill, an eminent physician of London. The visit was for the purpose of making inquiries in relation to the Tuthills: "He was very politely received, and obtained from Sir George much interesting information with regard to the family. The tradition being referred to, that the American Tuthills originally came from Hingham, England, Sir George remarked: 'The same family as my own; we were from the City of Norwich, and our ancestors were originally from Hingham.' In the course of the conversation, family traits and peculiarities were spoken of, among others, the tendency of the hair to become grey at a comparatively early age, and Sir George referred to his own hair, which was almost white, although but little over forty years of age. The peculiar color of the eyes, so universal in the family, was mentioned: A gray, slightly dashed with hazel, which was at once corroborated, somewhat to the amusement as well as satisfaction of both, by observing that their own eyes were exactly alike. Other traits and resemblances were referred to and discussed by Sir George, who was ardently devoted to physiological investigations, and he expressed the decided conviction that our branch of the family and his own were from the same parent stem." Subsequent researches proved that such was the fact, for Sir George was descended in the sixth generation from John Tuthill, brother of Henry of Hingham, ancestor of the Long Island Tuthills. Sir George L. Tuthill was the associate of Sir Henry Hallford, and the personal friend of Coleridge and Charles Lamb. He had a very high reputation, especially in his treatment of diseases of the brain. He was knighted in 1820, and died in 1836, leaving an only daughter.

The Tothills of Ireland claim a still more ancient descent, and if the old Irish histories are to be credited, their ancestry commenced before the Christian era. "Thend concur in stating them to be of Milesian descent, through the well known sept or tribe of O'Toole (which seems to be but a variation of the name) and that their territory extended over a great portion of the beautiful hills and valleys in what is now known as the counties of Wicklow and Kildare.

They would appear to have been a warlike race, for when Ireland was overrun by the English, they heroically refused to submit to their rule, carrying on for many years an unequal contest against the armed hosts of a tyrannical invader.

Camden, the father of English antiquaries, says "The O'Tools and O'Birns obstinately withstand all law, and live in implacable enmity with the English."

It is noteworthy that he applies the name O'Toole and O'Tothill indiscriminately; for in again speaking of them, he says, "In 1311, Tassagard and Rathcane were invaded by the rapparies; namely, the O'Brinnes and O'Tothilles the day after St. John Baptist's nativity; whereupon in the autumn soon after, a great army was raised in Leinster to defeat them, both in Glendelory (Glendalough) and in other woody places."

"In 1331 O'Toole, the chieftain of the Imaile, at the head of a numerous band, plundered the castle and demesne of Talloght, (5½ miles S. W. by W. from Dublin) slew many of the Archbishop of Dublin's people, and defeated Sir Philip Britt and a body of Dublin men who had been sent against him."

"In 1398, O'Byrne and O'Toole fought a battle against the English, in which Mortimer, Earl of March, and a vast number of English were slain."

McDermot, (the annotator of the "Annals of Ireland by the Four Masters,") says, "the territory of the O'Tuathail's or O'Toole's chieftains of Hy Muireadhaigh, or Hy Murray, was quite an extensive domain, in the western part of Wicklow, comprising the greater portion of the present baronies of Talbotstown and Shillelagh, in that county, and extended as far as Almain, now the hill of Allen, in the county of Kildare, thus containing a great portion of the baronies of Naas, Kilcullen, Kilkea and Moone, and Connell in that county."

The O'Tooles were in ancient times styled princes of Imaile, which appears to have been a name applied to their territory, and is still retained in the Glen of Imaile in Wicklow, where they had their chief residence; and they also had castles in Carnew, Castle Kevin, Castle Dermot and other places.

They took their name from Tuathail, one of the early kings of Ireland, from whom they derive their descent, and being one of the head families of Leinster, of the same race as the McMurroughs, they are eligible to be kings of that province. The Celebrated St. Laurence O'Toole, Archbishop of Dublin, at the time of the English invasion, was son of Murtoth O'Toole, Prince of Imaile; and many distinguished chiefs of the name are mentioned in the course of these annals. They maintained their rank, and held large possessions down to the Elizabethian and Cromwellian wars, when their estates were confiscated; several of them were knighted at various periods, and Sir Charles O'Toole, an officer in King James' army, is said to have been the person who killed the Duke Schomberg at the battle of the Boyne; and several of them were distinguished officers in the Irish Brigades in the service of France and Spain.

The O'Tooles are still numerous in the counties of Wicklow, Dublin and Kildare.

The illustrious Prelate, thus referred to as St. Laurence O'Toole, and whom Camden calls Lawrenc O'Thothill, is quite a distinguished character in Irish history. He was b. in A. D. 1105, his father, Murtoth O'Tuathail* or O'Toole, was the Chieftain of Hy

A history of the descendants of these five sisters would comprise the romance of English history for two hundred years.

Muray, and his mother a daughter of the kindred tribe of O'Byrne--his possessions comprised about half of the present county of Kildare, from which he was dispossessed by the English invaders and driven into the fastnesses of Wicklow.

Laurence became so celebrated for his learning and piety, that when he had attained his twenty-fifth year, he was made Abbot of Glendalough, and upon the death of Gregory, the first Archbishop of Dublin, was by acclamation seated in the archiepiscopal chair, in which he continued until his death in 1180. He was so renowned for his sanctity, that in 1226 (forty-six years after his decease) he was canonized by Pope Honorius III, and thus, says his biographer, "a scion of the old Celtic race was placed on the calendar of Saints."

Lower, in his Patronymica Britannica, says that the O'Tooles or O'Tuoghalls claim an ancient Milesian descent from Cathaor More, King of Leinster, of the Hermonian race, ancestor of Laogaire, the first Christian monarch of Ireland, contemporary with St. Patrick."

The early history of Ireland, before the introduction of Christianity is somewhat obscure, but according to Keating, O'Flaherty, and the old annalists, the Milesians were originally a colony from Scythia, near the Euxine and Caspian seas, now called the Crimea.

The Scythians, who were by the Roman writers designated Celts-Scythians, were the most ancient inhabitants of Europe after the deluge, and were descendants of Japhet. They formed settlements in Spain, and Milesius, one of their race, became King. Heremon, Heber and Ir, the sons of Milesius, came to Ireland with a large fleet and a powerful army, and after a sanguinary battle, became masters of the whole country, and according to Keating, gave to its throne 171 Kings; the most of whom (as well as the early Kings of Scotland) were descendants of the Hermonian Branch of this ancient race.

One of the most renowned of these Milesian Monarchs was Tuathal Teachtmair, or Tuathal the acceptable. (He obtained the sobriquet of Teachtmair, the welcome or acceptable, from his being the deliverer of the nation from the tyrants of a hated oligarchy.)

Tuathal is celebrated as one of the greatest of the Irish Kings, for his wisdom and valor. In the revolt of the Firbolgs he was forced to fly from the kingdom to North Britain, but returned A. D. 130, and after fighting 85 battles was successful in recovering the crown. During his reign, which lasted thirty years, he reformed the abuses and corruptions that had prevailed in public affairs and introduced in Ireland a state of plenty and public tranquility never known in it before.

Warner naively says, "It must be observed that until this reign, few or none of the ancient Irish would submit to any trade or manual labor, lest they should degrade their origin, or bring a storm upon their families; but when they saw that by the order of this wise Monarch, the legislature took trade and manufactures under their special care and management, many of the Milesians condescended to follow some employment and to make themselves good for something beside cutting one another's throats."

This good King was slain in battle by an usurper whose name is given as Mal or Mail, who reigned four years, when Feidlim, the son of Tuathal, avenged his father's death by slaying the usurper and regaining the crown.

Feidlim was, from his great love of justice, surnamed the Legislator. He not only gave excellent examples of equitable government in his own private conduct, but by causing wise and wholesome laws to be enacted, the people of Ireland became more humane, honest and contented than they ever were before. His just and useful administration continued for nine years, when (a somewhat unusual circumstance in those turbulent days,) he died a natural death, and was succeeded by his son Cathaor More or Cathair the Great, from whose youngest son, Fiacha Barceanda, the O'Tooles claim a lineal descent.

The connection, if any, between the Tuthill or Tothill family of England and that of the same name in Ireland, is perhaps at this time unknown, at any rate, I have never yet been able to obtain any documentary proof that our English ancestors were originally from Ireland, although the conjecture is a plausible one.

The celebrated Edmund Spencer, who resided a short time in Ireland, and who in 1596, wrote his "View of the state of Ireland," says the O'Tooles are so called from the old British word Tol, i. e. a Hill country. And the idea of a common origin has some support from the descriptions and illustrations of Heraldry. The Coat of Arms of the O'Tooles of Ireland being a lion passant, argent. The Totyls of Wales, a lion rampant, sable. The Tothills of Devonshire a lion passant, sable. The Totehills of Yorkshire bearing as a crest, a lion stantant, gules; and the Tuthills of Cambridgeshire and Harfolskshire the like crest of a lion stantant gules, ducally crowned and collared and lined, or.

The lion, one of the emblems of the highest nobility, being the conspicuous bearing of the families, would indicate a common descent.

Nor is an emigration of some of the tribe of the O'Tooles to England, after the confiscation of their estates, at all improbable. It is well known that during the days of Wallace and Bruce, large numbers of the native Irish acted as auxiliaries to the English in the wars between that nation and Scotland—and it is not an improbable surmise that many of them after their term of service expired, preferred to remain and make their homes in England, there to live in peace and security, instead of returning to their native country, devastated by civil war and cursed by dissensions, anarchy and strife.

In Rymer's Fudora will be found a mandate issued to David O'Tothvill setting forth that the King (Edward II.) was about to march against his Scottish rebels, and requiring him, as the chief of his tribe, the attendance of all the force he could muster commanded by himself in person or by some nobleman of his race."—Hon. Wm. H. Tuthill's address.

From the foregoing it seems clear that this family name, in all its forms, is derived from those eminences, natural and artificial, once so common in Great Britain, called Tothills; and that various families not tracably related to each other bear a common patronymic by adoption of the place name of their residence.

The origin and meaning of the word Tot or Tut has been the subject of much discussion and speculation among the English scholars and antiquaries, and various theories had been advanced in relation to it; but, without presuming to pass judgment on the question, it seems to us that none of them is so satisfactory as that which we found in Allies' Antiquities and Folklore of Worcestershire, pp. 223, 294, 317. This essay is so clear, thorough and convincing that for ourself we feel that no more need be said. At this stage of the world's history it is, generally speaking, a long way back to the beginning of anything, and the Tuttle name is no exception to the rule. We copy the article entire:

PLACES AND ETYMOLOGY OF TOTHILL.

"Tutnall, Tetnal or Tortenhill (alias Oakfield), a hill in the Parish of Claines, lies about three miles north of Worcester, and had communication by signals with the camp at Ombersley, Ostorius' supposed fort, and with Embury Hill. Toothill in Ludridge, Trots-hill, Troshill or Toothill farm in Wamdon; Tutnal, Tutnal Mount and Tutnal Place in Tardebig; Touthill (Tothehel) Cross, Tutshill Common Field, and Little Tutshill in Eldersfield; Tutbach in Lower Sapay, all in Worcestershire. Mythe Toot or Tute near Tewkesbury in Gloucestershire; Tatnall Bridge near Talton in Herefordshire, and Tatenhill and Tutbury in Staffordshire. Doomsday Book notices Tothehel in Bloomsgrave, Teotintune in Worcestershire, Tetelerie, Titehala and Tatenhall in Staffordshire. Tetes-thorpe in Herefordshire, Tutenelle in Somersetshire, Toteham in Middlesex, Toteled in York. Totele in York and Lincoln, Totenais and Totescombe in Devon."

Dr. Thomas in his survey of Worcester cathedral, etc., notices Teottington, Tetintun, Taterington, and states that King Offa gave five manses of land at Teotington to the Monastery at Breedun.

There is a difference of opinion as to the etymology of the names of these places. Some say it comes from the Saxon word "teotan," to look out, and others from the Celtic god, Teutates. Bryant derives the name of such round hills from Tith, and says when towns were situated on eminences fashioned thus round, they were by the Amorians (i. e. descendants of Ham) called Tith, which answers to תִּיִּת in Hebrew, and to τίτον and τιτοός in Greek; that they were particularly sacred to Orus and Osiris, the deities of light, who by the Grecians were represented under the title of Apollo. That these mounts were not only in Greece, but in Egypt, Syria, and most parts of the world; that they were generally formed by art, being comprised of earth raised very high, which was sloped gradually and with great exactness, and the top of all was crowned with a high tower.

Although the Anglo-Saxons may have used such hills as lookout stations, still many of them may have been of ancient British origin and derivation, and the fact that all of the above mentioned hills or places in Worcestershire are either close to or were upon the sides of roads appears to favor the opinion that they were sacred to the Celtic Teutates, who was the guide over the hills and trackways.

Bryant says Theuth, Thoth, Taut, Taantes, are the same, little diversified, and belonging to the chief God of Egypt. That Eusebius speaks of him as the same as Hermes. That from Theuth the Greeks formed ΘΕΟΣ which with that nation was the most general name of the Deity. That it was the same Deity which the Germans and Celtæ worshiped under the name Theut, Ait or Theutates, whose sacrifice were very cruel, as we learn from Lucan.

The following interesting passage upon the subject is extracted from the Worcestershire Miscellany: "Cæsar, in his remarks upon the religion of Britain, observes that Mercury was the chief object of popular veneration; that there were many images of him, and that he stands as a guide over the hills and trackways (see Kemble's Saxons in England, p. 339, and as to the identity of this Mercury with Woden), not that the Roman Mercury was actually worshiped by that name before Cæsar arrived in Britain, but stones being sacred to Mercury among the Greeks and Romans, and Cæsar perceiving the artificial mounds surrounded by a stone or Similacrum were particularly venerated, he hence concluded that Mercury was the god held in particular esteem. Now Mr. Bowles says the Egyptian Thoth (Thoth, says Bishop Cumberland, was the son of Misraim, the son of Ham, and grandson of Noah), Thot or Tot, the Phœneecian Tautatus or Taute, the Grecian Hermes, the Roman Mercury, the Tautates of the Celts (so called by Lucan from the Celtic Du Taith), Deus Taatus, are universally admitted to be the same. (But the Gentleman's Magazine, Jan., 1829, pp. 45, 46, where doubts are expressed as to the identity of the Egyptian Troth with Hermes or the Gaulish Mercurius Teutates, and arguing that Taut or Tautates was the Egyptian Hercules, a symbol of the sun.) A stone was the first ancient representative of Thoth, Taute or Teut (the Latinized Teutates of Lucan) which being placed on eminences, natural or artificial, and more especially near roads, were thence called Tothills or Teuthills, and in many instances in various parts of the kingdom are so called at present."

A writer, designated as Merlin, in the Gentleman's Magazine, March, 1829, says: "When the Cimmerian Druids migrated from Asia into Europe they carried with them their patriarchal traditions, their Chaldean lore and their Cadmæan alphabet, together with that grand and characteristic badge of distinction, the name of Theu-tate. He further observes there is no language, ancient or modern, into which this name is so easily and naturally resolvable as the Cimbric or British, and that Theutaut is nothing more nor less than Dhue-Tad, the universal parent or God the father." Merlin says "the druids cherished this revered offspring of patrimonial tradition, till obliged by the stern Romans to relinquish it for the gods of the conquerers." Mr. Bowles, too, observes: "It will not be denied that as the Celts worshiped Mercury, that is this Troth, the druids secretly taught the immortality of the soul. The secret worship was of one infinite God, whose representative was the circle." Mr. Bowles also says Mercury's name in Celtic was Du Taith, from which Lucan calls him Teutates. According to my idea Thoth, Taute, Toute, Tot, Tut, Ted, Tet, are all derived from the same Celtic root, and were in names of places in England, indication of some tumulus or conical hills dedicated to the great Celtic God, Taute or Mercury, when there were Ubique per Angliam plurima simulacra, according to the testimony of Cæsar.

The reviewer of Mr. Bowles' work, in the Gentleman's Magazine, Feb., 1829, p. 140, observes: "It is plain from Livy that Mercury Εὐρύτομος (or Kalis) was called among the Celts, Mercury Teutates and both these tumuli (referred to by Mr. Bowles) were on the sides of roads. Cæsar proves the application, for he says of the Britons that they made Mercury 'Viarum atque iterum ducem,' hence the case concerning the Tothills is very satisfactorily made out."

The name of Tuttle is thus traced back to those natural or artificial mounds or hills in Britain, which two thousand years ago were sacred to a pagan worship, and thence through dim millenniums to the deified founder, Thoth.* Thot or Tot—of that ancient and vanished civilization which flourished on the banks of the Nile before the beginning of historic time. The fact is replete with associations and suggestions of the most interesting character, for however slender the thread that connects us with them, the connection is clear and unbroken, and like the small wire along which thought flies with the speed of light and unites the uttermost parts of the earth, this little word reaches back to distant generations and centuries and brings them near to us in thought. The meaning of the word Tothill is "The Hill of God." Such a name should be ennobling to its possessor, like that of Fane, which suggests the sacredness of the House of God, and whose motto is, "Bring nothing base to the Temple." "It is," says the London Notes and Queries, "a grand old name."

Many of its orthographic variations may be gathered from the preceding account. In early times uniformity in such matters was discarded, and the same person signed his name to the most important documents, as deeds, conveyances and wills, in divers ways. Even Richard Tothill, an intelligent and educated man and a good printer, seemed to have no rule or guide but caprice. "How many ways," says Hansard in his Typographia. "did Richard Tothill spell his name." And Stow, in his Survey of London, spells it in three different ways. The following is a partial summary of variations: Tuthill, Tuttil, Tuttill, Tutoll, Tutthil, Tuttell, Tutle, Tottle, Tothill, Tottell, Totyle, Tothille, Totehall, Tothyll, Tothyl. The Irish Clan of O'Toole is also called O'Toohile and O'Tothill, indifferently, and the same name is indicated by Tuathail, Tuathal, O'Thot: hill, O'Tuoghall, O'Tothville, Touthill, Toythill, Totehill, Tothele and Touttle.

For a while after the immigration the name appears in New England under different disguises. William of New Haven wrote it Tuttell and Tuttle, and perhaps in other ways. His wife wrote it Tuttle. One of the sons signs his name Tutle, and in the early records it sometimes appears as Touttle. In the next generation or two it settled down to its present form in all the New England families, excepting among the descendants of Henry Tuthill of Hingham, who have generally adhered to the more correct orthography of Tuthill. That Tothill is the correct spelling appears from the history and derivation of the word, and is also implied as to the last syllable by the Crest of the Devon family, "On a hill." The change to its present form is no improvement, and is to be regretted. "It is a dreadful name to stranger ears." There is no magic in it. It may be a consolation to know that the letter T, which takes so prominent a part in its composition, occupying three of its six places, was once a letter of great dignity. The Roman Tribunes indicated their assent to the decrees of the Senate by subscribing the letter T. The Egyptians considered this letter as the symbol of life.

We should not feel satisfied to leave out of this account some mention of those grand monuments which for 35 centuries have stood as memorials of the name of Thoth.

He seems to have been the founder of the Egyptian Civilization. In the ancient mythology he is called the son of Jupiter, by Maia, for whom the month of May was named, and the first month of this Egyptian year was called Thoth, and began about our 20th of July. Thoth is the inventor of commerce, letters, music and the reckoning of time.* He is the God of Wisdom; he records the final judgments and conducts the souls of men to their final rewards or punishments. He is represented as ibis-headed, a bird that preys on serpents, (ignorance and vice) and therefore sacred to the Egyptians. His wife is Ma-t, the daughter of the Sun. She is the Goddess of Truth, and is characterized by an ostrich feather—the emblem of truth—upon her head. These myths are part of a system of personifications, emblems and fables designed to teach the great religious ideas of Monotheism; the divine origin and future existence of the soul, the warfare of good and evil, and the final judgment for deeds done in the body.

It became the custom of the kings of Egypt of the 18th and 19th dynasties to compound their names with those of their gods, as Thotmes from Thoth, Rameses from Ra, the sun, &c. The 18th dynasty began, according to the most recent chronology, with Aahmes I. about 1700* B. C. and ended with the accession of Rameses, about 1400 B. C.† This was the period of Egypt's greatest power and prosperity, and to it belong the paintings and papyri which have come down to modern times, and those great monuments which have excited the wonder and admiration of succeeding ages. It includes the entire period of Jewish history in Egypt from Joseph to that of Exodus.‡ The 2d king of this dynasty was Amenophis I. who resigned about 1666 B. C. The 3d king was Thotmes I. about 1633 B. C. He was a great warrior and marched his armies as far as the Euphrates. He excavated the great rock temple of Amenra at Thebes. His son Thotmes II. was the 4th king of this dynasty. He married his sister Hatshepu, and after his death she reigned alone until she associated a younger brother, Thotmes III., in the government, and after her death he reigned alone; in all 55 years. He was the 5th king of the 18th dynasty, and is styled Thotmes the Great. He flourished about 1600 B. C. He was perhaps the father of that maid of Egypt who took the infant Moses from the rushes. He was succeeded by his son Amenophis II. and his son Thotmes IV. was the next king; and to him is the monolith that now stands in the piazza of St. Peters. It was brought to Rome by Caligula and set up in the Vatican Circus, but afterwards removed to its present location. Amenophis III., son of Thotmes IV., built two temples at Thebes: also the great temple of El Uksur, and the vocal statue of Memnon and its fellow, still standing among the ruins of Thebes, and now known from recent discoveries to be his own statues. He is supposed to be the Pharaoh of the Exodus.

The 2d king of the 19th dynasty was Sitalif; and the 3d was Rameses II. "the great" the Sesostris of the Greeks, who flourished about 1333 B. C.

Thotmes III. of the 18th dynasty erected at On (Heliopolis) the loftiest obelisk now existing. It is 108 feet high. It was removed by Constantine the Great to Alexandria, and thence by his successor Constantius to Rome, where it now stands in front of the church of St. John Lateran. He also set up before the temple of Amen at Heliopolis, a pair of obelisks upon which were inscribed his legend; to which some two or three hundred years later, Rameses II. added two lateral columns. These obelisks remained where they were first erected until Augustus Caesar, Emperor of Rome, in the 8th year of his reign (23 years B. C.) removed them to Alexandria and set them up in front of a temple he founded called "The Caesarium." In course of time one of them fell and was buried under the drifting sands of the desert. In 1877 the prostrate one was dug out, removed to London and set up on the Thames embankment. In 1879 its fellow was presented by the Khedive of Egypt to the city of New York, and in the fall of that year it was taken down and its removal commenced under the superintendence of Commander Gorringe of the U. S. N. In Feb., 1881, he successfully completed his task, and it now stands erect in the Central Park of New York city. (It was our privilege to witness this 3d erection.) The expense of removing it was about one hundred thousand dollars, which Wm. H. Vanderbilt is said to have defrayed. Exclusive of the foundation and pedestal it is sixty-nine and a half feet high.

The hieroglyphics on the four sides of the London Obelisk were translated by Samuel Burch, Esq., LL. D., D. C. L., F. S. A., Keeper of Oriental Antiquities in the British Museum. They are the same as those on the New York Monolith. The central lines recount the titles and attributes of Thotmes III. The side lines to Rameses II. are of the same import. One of the central lines will give an idea of all the rest: "The Horus, lord of the upper and lower country, the powerful bull; crowned in Uas or Thebes, the King of the north and south. Ramen Cheper, has made his monument to his father, Haremachu (Horus in the horizons) he has set up to him two great obelisks, capped with gold, at the first time of the festivals of thirty years, according to his wish he did it, the Son of the Sun Thotmes (III) type of types did it, beloved of Haremchu (Horus in the horizons) ever living."

Some remarkable discoveries have recently been made in Egypt about four miles east of Thebes. A gallery has been found cut in the face of an almost perpendicular mountain, ending in an almost inaccessible cave or well. The gallery is 250 feet long and the cave 36 feet deep. In the well were found some four thousand objects, among them thirty-six royal sacrophages, with the inner cases and mummies intact, belonging to Pharaohs, queens, princes, princesses and high priests of the 17th, 18th, 19th and 21st dynasties. They include among others, Rameses I. and II., and Sitalif I. of the 19th dynasty, and Aahmes, Amenophis I., Totmes I. II. and III., and Hatshepu, sister of Totmes III. Some of them have glass eyes and look quite life like.

TOTHILLS OF DEVON.

The first of this branch known to us is William Totyl. His name stands at the head of a pedigree taken from Meyrick's Heraldic Visitations of Wales, Vol. 1, p. 183, dated Oct. 24, 1591, and received from Rychard Tottyll, whose arms, as described, are the same as in the frontispiece, excepting that the lion is rampant instead of passant, and is differenced with a mullet, denoting that he was the third son.

His arms are impaled with the arms of Grafton. From the above visitation, from Polwheles Devon, and from sundry English Co. Histories and other works we have gleaned the following accounts of this branch, which, though but a fragment, is sufficient to show the standing, character and associations of the family at the time of, and a hundred years antecedent to the settlement of New England. A copy of the pedigree in Tuckett's Devon, has been kindly forwarded to us by Ainsworth Spofford, Esq., Librarian of Congress.

William Totyl, called in the pedigree, Esq., of Devonshire, was bailiff in 1528; again in 1548: High Sheriff* of Devon in 1549, and Lord Mayor of Exeter in 1552. At this period Exeter was the political capital of the West of England, and second only to London in importance. The great manufacturing and commercial cities of Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, etc., were insignificant hamlets. In the time of Charles the 1st it contained about 10,000 inhabitants. Its venerable Cathedral was begun in the 13th century. It is a city of great antiquity—a Bishopric, and the capital of Devonshire, which is one of the most beautiful counties in England, and one of the largest, being second only to Yorkshire in size. In regard to sheriffs, Fuller remarks: "The reader will not be disappointed at the many armless (i. e. lacking Coats of Arms) sheriffs of London. They were not so cognizable persons as the sheriffs of counties. The latter were men of known and grown estate, eminent for family." That he was eminent for family in another sense than that intended by Fuller appears in the fact that he had 36 children, though probably not all by one wife. In the pedigree his wife is called "Elizabeth Mathew of Vorganwg," and she was doubtless the mother of Geoffrey, John, Robert and Richard, and perhaps of several more. She was daughter of Geoffry Mathew of Glamorganshire, which some Welsh genealogists have traced back to Gwaethwed, Prince of Cardigan and Gwent, while others deduce it from Yorkelyne. Burke, in his Landed Gentry, says the name was of considerable distinction in Cornwall and Devon at an early date. Of this line was Sir David Mathew of Llandaff, "Great Standard Bearer," Admiral Thomas Mathew, M. P., Col. John Mathew, who took a leading part, under his relations on the maternal side, Sir Richard and Sir Bevil Granville in the civil war in the west of England, George Mathew, High Sheriff of Glamorganshire, 1592, who married, 1620, Elizabeth, Viscountess Thurbes, mother of James, Duke of Ormond, and settled in Ireland, Tobias Mathew, Archbishop of York, and Cecil Mathew, married Baron Talbot and is represented by the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot.

*It has been observed of the Saxons, that when they divided the realm into provinces, called, in Saxon, Shires, and in Latin, Comitatus (i. e. Counties) framed the government of them from the ancient custom of the Romans, from whom it was descended to them from their German ancestors, in conformity to which they constituted certain of their chief men to preside over their Shires, which they called Eardlomen, (or, in Latin, Comites or Consules). King Alfred, for more ready administration of justice, allowed the Eardlomen or Counts to make deputies who were called Vice Comites or Vic Counts, and in their own tongue, Sheriffs, i. e. the Shyre—reeve from the Saxon word Gerefa or Gereva, i. e. provisor—praefect or Steward to distribute justice to the people, in their provincial or county courts. Finally the Sheriff became the chief executive officer, the Earl being an attendance on the King. They were usually men of high rank and great power in the realm. In the reign of King Edward I, the election of Sheriff was granted to the people, before appointed by the King, though Edward II continued to appoint Sheriffs for several counties. Elections grew so tumultuous that by statutes of Edward III, Henry VI and Henry VIII, the Chancellor, Treasurer, Pres. of King's Council, Chief Justices and Chief Baron are to make the election.—Hasted's Hist. of Kent Co.

To whom thy virtues made thee dear;
But thou a Sainte did'st Heaven aspire,
Whilst here on earth wee thee admire;
Then rest deere corps in mantle claye

Thy years were few, thy glass being run,
When death did end thy life begun."

Under the effigy which is reclined as a pedestal:

"Speake Statue, tell her story,

George Tothill, prob. descended from Jeffery, was Bailiff 1662, again in 1664, Lord Mayor of Exeter 1668, again in 1677. By mandate of the King made Alderman of Exeter 1687; next year William, Prince of Orange, landed at Torbay and advanced with his small army towards Exeter. The Prince had been informed that the people stood ready to receive him with acclamations of joy and that all the gentry of the west would join him at his landing. But the cruel disposition of the King James, and the recent atrocities of Kirk and Jeffreys, had filled the minds of the nobility and gentry with dread of the awful consequences of failure. One of the officers of the Prince who preceded with a few horsemen was put under arrest and confined by the authorities of Exeter. The next day Lord Mordaunt and Dr. Burnet, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury, arrived with four troops of horse and found the gate shut against them. The Lord Mayor assigned as a reason the obligation of his oath to the King. Lord Mordaunt ordered the Porter to open the gate on pain of death, and upon his refusal, says Jenkins in his Hist. of Exeter, "George Tuthill, Esq., one of the Aldermen, opened it and admitted the troops."

For several days scarcely any person of note came in. Of the magistrates of Exeter only Alderman Tuthill and one other at first declared in his favor. This appeared so unfavorable to the Prince that he began to doubt the success of his expedition and at one time proposed to reembark for Holland. But the spirit and firmness of Alderman Tuthill seem to have inspired the gentlemen of Devon and Somerset with courage for they soon began to come forward in great numbers and the revolution became an accomplished fact. Subsequently being largely engaged in mercantile business he met with very heavy losses at sea and became much reduced in circumstances, which coming to the knowledge of King William he gratefully awarded him a pension of £200 per annum. He is perhaps the Mr. Tothill referred to as the purchaser of Bagtor.*

4. John Tothill, m. and had: 1. Elizabeth. 2, William, f. of William of the Middle Temple, Esq., b. about 1600; m. Grace, dau. and co-heiress of Henry Tothill, Esq.,

II. in Ireland, only s. of John Ford of Bagtor, Esq., by Katharine d. and he of George Drake of Sprattsbays, Esq., Lieut.-Col. under his kinsman Sir John Drake of Ashe. Bagtor was sold by desc. of Tothill to the 1st Lord Ashburton.

6. Juliana Tothill, m. Richard de Burnbury, and had: 1, Grace. 2, Mary. 3, Thomas.* 4, Elizabeth. 5, Joan.

9. Richard Tothill, described in the pedigree as one of the justices of the peace of Castle Gwys (Wiston in Pembrokeshire) and London; was a printer and stationer of London, where he resided for forty years at the sign of the Hand and Star, in Fleet street, near Temple Bar, during which period he printed 78 books, chiefly on law. His first license dated April 12, 1549, to print books on common law for seven years; renewed May 3, 1556, for seven years; renewed for life Jan. 12, 1558.

His first imprint bears date Oct. 1, 1551. His second, Oct. 1, 1552. "A Manifest Detection of the most Vile and Detestible Vice of Dice Playing." In 1552 he printed an abridgment of the "Chronicles of England," by Richard Grafton (his father-in-law). This edition contains somewhat in relation to the controversy between Grafton and Stow. Same year he printed "The Tragical History of Romeo and Juliette, a metrical paraphrase from the Italian of Bandello, translated by Arthur Brook, with Sonnets. (See Warton's History of English Poetry, Vol. 111, p. 571.) In 1563, Grafton's Chronicles of England, containing 1368 pp., besides a table of the bailiffs, sheriffs and mayors. Grafton's Rebus on title page and under it, "imprinted by Henry Denham† for Richard Tottle and Henry Toxe.

In 1570, Richard Tottle printed an Abridgment of the Chronicles, which contained a remarkable prologue against John Stow, who replied in 1573. In 1571 he printed a Treatise containing Tables and Rules, by R. Grafton. In 1579, in conjunction with Benneman, he printed "Stowe's Chronicles."

In 1578 he was made Master of the Stationer's Company, and held the office for six years, and probably re-elected in 1584, for "latterly having retired for the benefit of his health, the business of the company was sometime at a stand, as appears by an ordinance of the court of assistants, Sept. 30, 1589." After his retirement the London business was carried on by his son.

In 1583 he gave to the company for the relief of the poor, Tullie's offices in English and Latin, Moral Philosophy, Romeo and Julietta, Quintus Curtius in English, Mr. Dr. Wilson on Usurie, Two English Lovers, Songs and Sonnets by the Earl of Surrey. A book, "Diall of Princes," bearing his imprint, is in the Astor Library. The State library at Hartford also contains one of his imprints. Hansard's Typographia contains a drawing of his device of the "Hand and Star," and of his monogram and motto, of which the engraving below is a copy.

RICHARD TOTTEL

In Lyson's Environs of London, I find that the Manor of Perry Place (now Perry Oaks), in Middlesex, near London, was demised in 1587 to Sir Christopher Heaton for 21 yrs., at £8 per annum, and in 1592, to Joan, wife of Richard Tottill, and her sons William and John for their respective lives in reversion. In 1603 this estate was granted to Lord William Paget.

†Henry Denham was a former apprentice of Richard Tottle and probably brother of the wife of Richard's son, William Tothill of Shardeloes. "Henry Denham was an exceedingly nice printer, and was the first who used the semi-colon with propriety. He was under-warden of the Stationer's Co., 1586-8." —Ames.

bought a fine estate near Amersham, in Bucks, called "Shardeloes," where "he had the honor of entertaining Queen Elizabeth." Hughson's Circuit of London says: "The old manor house of Shardeloes appears to have been the occasional residence of Queen Elizabeth." After the dec. of William Tothill, Shardeloes became the property of the Drakes by marriage of his daughter Joan Tothill to Francis Drake, and has continued to be the family seat down to our own time, for as late as 1836 Sir Trywhitt Drake, M. P., was of Shardeloes, and High Sheriff of Bucks. The house has been added to and changed in many respects. Among the pictures are a fine portrait of Queen Elizabeth and the Destruction of the Spanish Armada, in which Sir Francis Drake participated as Vice-Admiral with his relative, Sir John Hawkins, as Rear Admiral. The "Monument Room" has several Drake monuments, of which that to Montague Gerard Drake (1728) is very magnificent.

William Tothill m. Katharine, dau. of John Denham,* gent. We have gone thus largely into details in this account of the Devon Branch for the reason that all the circumstances point unmistakably to it as the source of the four Tuttle families who came over in 1635.

EMIGRATION TO NEW ENGLAND.

The circumstances which led to the colonization of New England are matters of history, and require only a brief allusion here. England was on the verge of a great civil war, the end and outcome of which no man could predict, but which would certainly bring widespread calamity, ruin, and death in its train. The establishment of the Plymouth Colony had pointed out to the English reformers a way of escape from the religious persecution they had so long endured, and from the evils of the impending conflict.

Between 1629 and 1640, these hard alternatives were pressed upon the harrassed and long suffering people of England. On the one hand, the horrors of civil war, intensified by religious animosities. On the other, a savage wilderness on the far side of 3000 miles of ocean. Those who chose the latter were certainly not lacking in courage. To the known dangers to be braved and hardships and sufferings to be endured were added those which are always the most dreadful in anticipation, the unknown. The manner in which the exigency was met by those who stayed and did battle, as well as by those who fled to the wilderness, shows that they were men fit to become "the sires of Empires yet to be."

In the early part of the period above named occurred "the great emigration," and the planting of the principal New England Colonies. The more cautious and prudent—those having the strongest attachments and the largest interests at home, would naturally be the most reluctant and among the latest to leave. And so it happened that the later emigrants, those who came between 1635 and 1640, were, as a general thing, of a higher class than those who came earlier; or perhaps it would be more proper to say the later emigrations comprised a larger proportion of the higher classes than the earlier. The company of Eaton and Davenport, who came in 1637, and a little later founded New Haven, is a well-known instance. The Tuttles came in 1635, as appears from Drake's Researches, from which we copy the following list of

The same month John Bill, aged 13, came in the Hopewell.

It appears from the above list that three distinct families of Tutttles came together in the Planter. Of these, John settled in Ipswitch, Mass., Richard settled in Boston, and William in New Haven.

Another John Tuttle came with his family in the "Angel Gabriel," in the same year, 1635, and settled in Dover, N. H.

John Tuthill,† came with his brother Henry about the same time, 1635. He was a widower in 1637. "After a few years," says Charles B. Moore, "he returned to England, where he m. a 2d wife." Settled at Weybread, Suffolk Co., and left descendants there. His brother Henry was of Hingham, Mass., and Southold, Long Island. We propose to give some account of all these families before proceeding with the main object of our work.

The late Hon. W. H. Tuthill of Tipton, Iowa, had been for many years prior to his dec. collecting the genealogy of the Southold family.

Henry Tuthill, with wf. Bridget, from Norfolk Co., Eng., was of Hingham, 1637; freeman, 1638; constable, § 1640. He sold his property in 1644, and rem. to Southold, L. I. He d. before 1650, and his wf. Bridget who had m. Wm. Wells, was also dec.—Savage Gen. Dict.

Abigail Tuthill, b. Oct. 17, 1670; d. June 6, 1705.

The above record is from an old Bible, printed 1599, defaced and torn.

*Daughter of Joan Tuttle by former marriage to — Lawrence.

†The term husbandman was used to designate those who tilled their own lands, in distinction from farmers who hired the lands they cultivated.

‡The parish register of Tharston, Norfolk Co., Eng., says that Henry Tuthill of Tharston had John, bap. Oct. 25, 1607; William, bab. Oct. 29, 1609; Henry, bap. June 28, 1612 (father of John, of Southold). Dr. Hatfield, in his History of Elizabeth, N. H., calls John of Southold, nephew of William of New Haven, evidently identifying the latter as the William who was bap. at Tharston 1609. The date agrees with the age of Wm. of N. H., who was 26 in 1635. But this coincidence cannot be regarded in this instance as proof, or as evidence of identity, as there must have been a great many contemporary Williams in England, and there is nothing in corroboration, while the probability lies that Wm. of N. H., was bro. or near of kin to his fellow passengers of the Planter are well nigh certain.

John Tuttle, the immigrant ancestor of the New Hampshire family, sailed from Bristol, Eng., in the "Angel Gabriel;" in 1635.* The vessel was wrecked at Pemaquid, on the coast of Maine, Aug. 15, 1635. He went first to Ipswich, Mass. In 1640 his name appears among the first settlers of Dover, where he received lot No. 7 of the 20 acre lots. There were 24 of these 20 acre allotments laid out to as many persons, and that of John Tuttle is the only one of the 24 that is now and always has been owned by descendants of the first grantee. ## RICHARD TUTTLE OF BOSTON.

Admitted to the church, March 3, 1636. Same month chosen on a committee with Thomas Oliver, Thomas Leverett, William Hutchinson and others, to oversee and regulate the internal affairs of the town. Nov. 5, 1638, he was chosen constable of Boston. Same year he had an allotment of land at Rumney Marsh, Chelsea and Pullen Point, 161 acres.

1638, John Odlen sold his great lot of 84 acres at Rumney Marsh to Richard Tuttle for £29, 8 s.

Jan., 1638-39, Nicholas Willys sold his great lot of 49 acres upland and marsh at Romely Marsh to Richard Tuttle for £30 12 s. 6 d.

May, 1639, Robert Harding of Boston sold his proper allotment at Rumney Marsh, about 50 acres, to Richard Tuttle for £33 5 s. 8 d. He contributed with others for the maintenance of a school teacher. He d. May 8, 1640. For fac simile of his autograph, see Drake's Hist. of Boston, p. 243. Oct. 31, 1642, Widow Touthill had liberty granted her to remove her windmill into the Fort, which must be placed as Capt. Gibbons directs, and next yr. "the highway already begun for Wid. Tuttle's windmill to the fort, should be laid out 20 feet wide." Anne Tuttle in 1650 had house and lot in Boston and farm at Rumney Marsh.

The lot in Boston that Geo. Griggs mortgaged to Wm. and John Tuttle was bounded on the east by Mrs. Tuttle's lot.

Probably Richard Tuttle had no other children than those who came with him in the Planter. The wid. Dorothy Bill* lived at his house and was probably his sister. By order of the court he was to be responsible for her "or anything about her," supposed to mean that he would support her and her children.

I. Anne Tuttle, b. in Eng., 1623.

II. John Tuttle, b. in Eng., 1625; m. Feb. 10, 1647, Mary Holyoke.

I. Mary Tuttle, b. April 18, 1653; d. Feb. 27, 1728, a. 75; m. Dec. 14, 1672, Caleb Carter of Charlestown. His will proved 1694.

The following are doubtless descended from Richard of Boston, but I am not able at this time to connect and place them.

John Tuttle, Edward Tuttle, Elisha Tuttle, Jonathan Tuttle, freemen of Boston, 1689-90, were probably sons of John and Mary (Holyoke).

*John and Dorothy Bill, son James, a. 23, and dau. Mary, a. 11, came over in the Planter, 1635, and had besides, probably Thomas and Philip. John Bill d. in Boston, 10th month, 1638; believed to be son of John Bill, bap. 1575, who appears in London, 1613, as publisher to King James, after receiving the royal license as King's Printer. The name of "Printing House Square" was given to his place of business, still so called, and the London Times is printed there. The Am. Bible Society has a number of Bibles with Bill's imprint. His first wife was Anne, dau. of Thomas Mountford, D. D., author of Mirror of Modesty, pub. in London, 1621.—Bill Genealogy.

†Edward Holyoke of Lynn was from Tamworth, Warwick Co., Eng., where he m. June 18, 1612, Prudence, dau. of Rev. John Stockton, rector of Kinkolf. His will, made Dec. 25, 1658, gives "to my son Tuttle that £4 that should have been paid yearly to me, but of which I have never received a penny, for the house in Boston, my best doublet and breeches to son Tuttle."—Lewis' Annals of Lynn. Inv. 4681; John Tuttle and John Doolittle, appraisers.

The father of Edward H. of Lynn was Edward, and is thought to be the same Edward Holyoke mentioned in the will of Shakspeare's wife's (Anne Hathaway) father, where he is spoken of as having a claim of 20 s. for wood.—N. E. Gen. Reg.

JOHN TUTTLE OF IPSWICH.

Brother of Richard of Boston. The settlement at Ipswich, Mass., was begun in March, 1633, by John Winthrop, jr., (afterwards Gov. of Conn.) and twelve others; who were joined next year by Rev. Thomas Parker and one hundred others from Wiltshire, Eng. John Tuttle joined the settlement the same year that he arrived in the Planter, as appears by the town record in 1635; "a road four rods wide is reserved through John Tuttle's, 150 acres east of Mill river to the common." He was made a freeman March 13, 1639; Representative 1644. In 1651 he is called "Mr., a way being reserved between "Mr. Tuttle's swamp and the ends of the lots."—Felt's Hist. of Ipswich. March 13, 1659, John Tuttell of Ipswich, merchant, gave bond for £2000 to Daniel —ffaivax and Isaac Legay of London, merchants, to pay £1180 10 s. in provisions and cattle before Nov., 1650, and he consigned to them goods, &c., value £812 3 s. and a penny as per invoice signed by Joanna his wife. The bond was discharged by payment in full in 1652 by Mrs. Joanna Tuttle. He went to Ireland about the time that the disheartened colonists at New Haven were negotiating for the purchase of the city of Galloway in Ireland for a future home. He established himself advantageously there and did not return. He d. at Carrickfergus, Dec. 30, 1656. His wife Joanna followed him to Ireland in 1654. *The Lawrence Genealogy with a strange obtuseness calls John Tuttell's wife "foster mother" to the Lawrence children. In 1659 she writes to Geo. Giddings as her son and so calls John and Simon Tuttle and John Lawrence; John Tuttle, aged 33 yrs. in 1659, which identifies him with Richard's son of that name, she calls her cousin (nephew). Besides William, John and Jane, wife of Giddings, she had a son Thomas Lawrence who came afterwards. They were from St. Albans in Herts.—Savage.

few exceptions this branch produce their most brilliant men from Meshach*. Jabez comes from this line, and the males are all very prolific, each producing from 15 to 18 children, who scattered to the four quarters of the Union, and so far as I am able to learn, prove a credit to their country and name. From this one comes the greater part of the descendants of the first Michael. It seems also to be the most prolific. I suppose the Tuttle blood accounts for it—and produces the most men of note. You may safely draw the outlines of Sarah's descendants very strong and then not overdo it."—Randolph W. Farley.

*Randolph W. Farley, Esq., of Nashua, N. H., who has spent several years collecting the history of the Farley family, and to whom I am under obligations, says that a painting of Farley Castle was brought over in 1675 by Michael Farley of Ipswich, Mass., and has been seen within 30 years. About 50 years since, an English writer published a history of the castle in verse. The family is represented as of Welsh derivation or early amalgamation.

Michael Farley (with two sons) Michael and Meshach, came over in 1675 as agent for Sir Richard Saltonstall, and settled in Ipswich, Mass. Meshach m. Sarah Burnham as above.

minute men, organized by the Provincial Congress, and marched with it to Lexington; arriving after retreat of the British, he proceeded to Cambridge. On the 16th of June, 1775, was ordered to Charlestown with three regiments, and directed to throw up works on Bunker Hill, but Breed's Hill being more suitable, the defences were erected there. The next day Gen. Howe, with a force more than quadruple that of Col. Prescott, after a contest among the most desperate in American annals, and with immense loss, succeeding in dislodging him. Col. Prescott was one of the last to leave the intrenchment, and offered to retake the position the same night if the commander-in-chief would give him two regiments. In 1777 he resigned his command and went home, but in autumn of same year joined the northern army under Gates, and was present at the capture of Burgoyne, his last military service. He was a mem. of the Mass. Legislature several years. He d. Oct. 13, 1795, highly esteemed as an energetic, brave and patriotic citizen. Col. 1783, with high honors; taught school in Brooklyn, Conn., and in Beverly, Mass., at the latter place two years, and studied law meanwhile with Nathan Dane, founder of the Harv. law professorship. Invited by Washington to join his family as a private teacher, but declined. Prac. law in Beverly, afterwards in Salem; rep. that town in Mass. Leg., afterwards Senator of Essex Co. In 1805 offered and declined a seat on the bench of the Supreme court of Mass., and again in 1813. In 1809, to relieve himself of a part of his business, rem. to Boston; served several years as one of the governor's council. In 1814 appointed delegate to the Hartford convention. In 1818 appointed Judge of Court of Common Pleas for Suffolk Co., but resigned next year. In 1820 a delegate to the convention for revising the constitution of Mass. LL.D. from Harv. 1824, and from Dart. Col.; mem. of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; d. in Boston Dec. 8, 1844, a. 82. Dec. 18, 1793, Catharine Green, dau. of Thomas Hickling, and had seven chil., of whom four d. in infancy.

1. William Hickling Prescott, b. Salem, Mass., May 4, 1796; d. of paralysis, in Boston, Jan. 28, 1859; Harv. Col. 1814. In his last year at col. while in the dining hall a classmate playfully threw at him a crust of bread, which struck one of his eyes and deprived it almost totally of sight. Excessive use of the other eye in study so injured it as to prevent reading for several years. Subsequently it improved and he was enabled to use it many hours of the day; but during the latter part of his life he could read only a few moments at a time, and could hardly see to write at all. Under these circumstances his great historical works were composed. Ferdinand and Isabella, 3 vols., 1837, translated into German, French and Spanish; History of Mexico, 3 vols., 8 vo, 1847, London and New York; History of Philip II, 3 vols., 8 vo. He also wrote brief memoirs of his friends, John Pickering and Abbott Lawrence, and a series of essays, pub. in the North American Review, comprising the chief fruits of his studies in French and Italian Literature, on Moliere, Italian Narrative Poetry, Poetry and Romance of the Italians, and others on kindred topics. These were republished in London and New York, in a volume of miscellanies, which have passed through several editions. He was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of History at Madrid, and a member of nearly all the principal learned bodies in Europe, and in 1845 he was made a corresponding member of the Institute of France. In person he was tall and slender, with a fresh and florid complexion, and lively and graceful manners. "His personal appearance," says Mr. Bancroft, "was singularly pleasing, and won for him everywhere in advance a welcome and favor. His countenance had something that brought to mind the 'beautiful disdain' that lowers on that of Apollo. But while he was high-spirited, he was tender and gentle and humane. His voice was like music, and one could never hear enough of it. His cheerfulness reached and animated all about him. He could indulge in playfulness and could also speak earnestly and profoundly; but he knew not how to be ungracious or pedantic." He m. *Harriet was dau. of Capt. Linzee of the British Navy, who, at the battle of Bunker Hill and burning of Charlestown, commanded the British Sloop of War "Falcon," which lay in Charles River and bombarded the troops under Col. Prescott on Bunker Hill. The sword which Capt. Linzee wore on that occasion descended in his family to his granddaughter, and on her m. to Wm. H. Prescott it came into his possession. The sword which Col. Prescott wore at Bunker Hill also descended to his grandson, and thus the two swords met at last in peace, and were kept crossed over the books in Mr. Prescott's library, until his death, and then they were transferred by his will to the Mass. Hist. Soc., to be kept in the same relative position.

ford, Vt.; recd. a common school education; stud. law and prac. in Vt.; rem. to Cal., 1852, and was partner with Gen. Halleck, firm of Halleck, Peachey, Billings and Park of San Francisco, which did a large share of the controversial land title business of the state, and in a few years he had earned enough money, as a lawyer, to invest in real estate, mining and other ventures, which all proved successful.

About 1856 he took charge of the Mariposa estate, then owned by Gen. Fremont, and eventually sold it to an Eastern Co. with a capital of ten millions. About 1863 he returned to the East and bought up the first mort. bonds of the W. Vt. R. R., and afterwards reorganized it under the name of the Bennington and Rutland R. R. He was connected with the purchase of the Emma Mine, and was the chief agent in selling it to English capitalists for five millions of dollars. He kept his own stock, settled with the English stockholders, and as late as last Thanksgiving Day, said to a friend that he considered the mine worth twice as much as he sold it for in London. # WILLIAM TUTTLE.

Prior to the embarkation on the Planter in April, 1635, we have no positive knowledge. The usual time of a voyage from Gravesend to Boston was about ten weeks. He arrived with his family about the first of July. About a year later "Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttell united with the church in Boston July 24, 1636."* There are two subsequent entries on the church record: "Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttell brought to be baptized a son Jonathan, July 2, 1637," and "Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttell brought to be baptized a son David, April 7, 1639." The colonial records of Mass., of New Haven and of Conn. contain in a few scattered fragments nearly all that is known of William Tuttle. From these, however, we are able to form some idea of his social position, associations, circumstances, employments and of his general character.

In the passenger list of the Planter he is called "husbandman." The distinction between a husbandman and a farmer was, the husbandman was a proprietor and tilled his own acres; the farmer was a leaseholder and paid rent. It appears, however, from a petition on file in the Secretary of State's office in Boston, that he was a merchant, and this might be partly inferred from his joining Mr. Eaton's company, many of whom had been engaged in commercial pursuits in the old country, and whose purpose was to found a commercial city in the new. The petition is as follows, without date: "To the right worshipful Thomas Dudley, Esq., and to the magistrates and deputies of this General Court, now in Boston assembled. The humble petition of Major Nehemiah Bowne, Edward Tyng, William Tutthill, Joseph Youngs, William Payne, John Milam and James Oliver, with divers others, being merchants and owners of the ketch, called the Zebulon, now belonging to Ipswich." Abstract of Petition.—Intend to send the said ketch to the Indies and ask for two guns to arm her. This is refused.—Mass. Arch., vol. 60, p. 168.

In 1638 George Griggs had permission of the court to "sell his house and gardening under it and twenty acres of his great lot to Mr. Tuttell of Ipswich and Mr. Tuttell of Charlestown for his redeeming out of their debts."—Drake's Hist. of Boston.

This item is suggestive in several particulars. First in the use of the title Mr.,† which was very rare indeed, especially in the case of young men. William Tuttle was *Record of First church in Boston.

†The title Hon. was entirely unknown in our records until 1685, and subsequently for many years was applied only to the Governor, and seldom even to him. The next title was that of Esq. and meant the same as in England, temp. Elizabeth and James I. Mr. Thomas Wells was a magistrate for 17 years, dep. Gov. 1 year and was chosen Gov. the 2d time before he was dignified with Esq. The next title was Gentleman, but seems to have been soon discarded in Conn. The prefix Master (Mr.) belonged to all gentlemen including those designated by the higher marks of rank. Master corresponds very nearly to the English word gentleman. In Conn. it embraced clergymen and planters of good family and estate who were members of the General Court. Those bred at an university and those of sufficient education to manage the general affairs of the colony, civil or ecclesiastical, and who had been sufficiently well born. Comparatively few of the representatives of the town, even though they might be returned year after year, were honored with the title. To be called Mr. or to have ones name recorded by the Secretary with that prefix 200 years ago was a more certain index of the rank of the individual as respects birth, education and good moral character than any one of the high sounding titles with which many men of no merit whatever in our day of swift locomotion are content to cajole others in order that they may be enriched in their turn with the same spurious currency. It may be observed by reference to our colonial records that there were scores of men of good family and in honorable stations who still did not possess all the requisite qualities of Masters. It was seldom that young men of whatever rank were called Masters. Sir was sometimes applied to young gentlemen undergraduates at a college. Goodman was used in speaking of the better sort of yeomen, laborers, tenants and others above the grade of servants, who owned a small estate and bore a good moral character. There are several instances of deputies to the General Court being called Goodman. Goodwife or Goody was the corresponding feminine title. Mrs. was applied to the wives of Masters and also to unmarried females of the higher class. Military then but twenty-nine years of age. It also suggests some sort of community of interest, partnership or relationship between William and John Tuttle as common creditors of George Griggs. The latter was called a carpenter, but it is said was formerly a London printer. A mortgage from George Griggs of Boston to William Tuttle of New Haven, dated the 8th of the 8th month, 1650, of a house and ground in Beacon street, Boston, bounded by street on the north, the lane on the east, the lot sometime Thomas Pettitt's on the west, and the Common on the south, to secure a debt of £10, is recorded in Suffolk Deeds. Payment of £13 10s. was made in corn, flesh, etc., English commodities at prices current. In this record the lot is bounded east by Mrs. Tuttell's lot.

On the 26th of July, 1637, Messrs. Davenport and Eaton, with their company, arrived at Boston, and in the fall of that year Mr. Eaton and others made a prospecting tour of the shore tract on Long Island Sound, between Saybrook and Fairfield, for the purpose of selecting a site for an independent colony, which they had determined to plant, declining the very liberal offers made by Massachusetts to induce them to remain in that jurisdiction. Quinnipiac was selected, a hut put up, and seven men were left to spend the winter.* The main body of the company sailed from Boston on the 30th of March, and arrived on the 14th of April, 1638. During the summer the town plot was laid out and house lots assigned to the settlers. On the 4th of June, 1639, the planters convened in Mr. Newman's barn and signed the Church Covenant. On this list the name of William Tuttle appears for the first time in the records of the Quinnipiac Colony. It stands on the record book between that of Benjamin Ling and Ezekiel Cheever, among the principal men, and towards the head of the list. It is probable that he removed to Quinnipiac between the date of his son David's baptism in April, and the signing of the Church covenant in June.

In 1641 he was owner of the home lot of Edward Hopkins, who had built a house on it, and soon after removed to Hartford; became Gov. of Conn. and founder of the Grammar School that bears his name. This lot was on the square bounded by Grove, State, Elm and Church streets (names given more than a century and a half after the original survey) and was one of eight allotments into which the square was divided. Gov. Eaton, his brother Samuel, and Richard Perry had lots on Elm st. Capt. Nathaniel Turner, on Church st. Ezekiel Cheever's, David Yale's and Mrs. Eaton's (mother of the Gov.) fronted on Grove and State sts. The Hopkins lot fronted on State st., from the corner of Grove to Wall st., and perhaps a little beyond, and in depth extended about two-thirds of the distance to Orange st. In other words it included about two-thirds of the present square, bounded by State, Wall, Orange and Grove sts. Henry Hooker's carriage factory and other buildings stand on a part of it. The bed of a creek which originally ran diagonally across a corner of it was made use of in building the Farmington Canal, and is now the bed of the New Haven and Northampton Company's Railroad. The last named work was located and constructed through the city about 1849, by the compiler of this record as assistant engineer, under the direction of Henry Farnam, Esq.

In 1656 William Tuttle bought of Joshua Atwater his original allotment, mansion house and barn, with certain other lands, recorded in the Proprietor's Record, as follows: "Alienation: Mr. Joshua Atwater passing over to Mr. William Tuttle his house, home lot and barn, ten acres in the first division, in the Yorkshire Quarter, betwixt land of Thomas Johnson and land that was Mrs. Constable's, 28 acres in the Neck," etc. Mr. Atwater removed to Milford in 1656, thence, in 1659, to Boston. This became the Tuttle homestead, and so continued until his death, and, after that, his widow resided there until she died, in all a period of twenty-eight years.

As the most interesting associations are now connected with this spot of ground, we propose to give here its subsequent history as briefly as possible. In the inventory of titles were considered of a very high order. Previous to 1654 the highest military officer in the colony was Captain."—Hollister's Hist. of Conn.

Felt, in Hist. of Ipswich, relates that a man was degraded from the title of Mr. for a misdemeanor. Palfrey, in Hist. of New England, says: "There was great punctiliousness in the application of both official and conventional titles. Only a small number of persons of the best condition (always including ministers and their wives) had Mr. or Mrs. prefixed to their names. Goodman or Goodwife was addressed to persons above the condition of servitude and below that of gentility."

Wm. Bradford, though at the head of the Bridgewater, Mass., proprietors, a son of the Gov. and himself often Lieut.-Gov., was not entitled to "Mr."

We have enlarged on this point because a school of modern critics, who deny everything and insist upon proof, have expressed doubts as to the significances of the title Mr. at this period in New England.

*This incident has been questioned. It seems probable enough, however, and far more likely to be true, than the alternative of its being a sheer fabrication. Mr. Eaton, having selected the situation for his settlement, would have deemed it a matter of prudence to leave a safeguard against the intrusion of the Dutch.

It rests on the authority of Trumbull, reiterated by Lambert.

William Tuttle's estate in 1673 it is called his "homestead," and valued at £110. In 1685 it appears in the inventory of the widow as "the homestead," valued at £120. Moses Mansfield and John Alling, jr., appraisers. In about a year after her death it was sold by her administrators, Thomas, Joseph and Nathaniel Tuttle, to Mrs. Hester Coster, widow, for £110. It is described as "Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttle's dwelling house and two acres, bounded west by the home lot of John Ball [p. 142], north by the home lot of Thomas Tuttle [p. 136], east by the Market Place, and south by the street." Hannah Jones (wf. of Dep. Gov. Wm. Jones and dau. of Gov. Eaton) and John Paine witnessed the deed. In this description of boundaries no mention is made of the street (now College st.), the "Market Place" (upper Green) being named as the eastern boundary.

The subsequent history of the lot is taken from Prof. W. L. Kingsley's folio, Hist. of Yale College, article on its land titles by Henry White, Esq. Mr. White describes it as about 200 feet on Chapel st. by about 270 feet on College st. These dimensions embrace an area of about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  acres, while the inventory and deeds call it 2 acres. Perhaps the street was included in the latter estimate. On General Wadsworth's map, drawn in 1748, the lot as measured by the scale is about 230 feet on Chapel by about 300 feet on College, and an area of about  $1\frac{3}{4}$  acres.

Mrs. Coster died April 6, 1691, a. 67 yrs. Her remains repose under the Center Church, and her name, date of death and age are inscribed on the tablet in the vestibule. In her will she devised this property to the "First Church of Christ in New Haven," to maintain a lecture in the spring and fall of the year. The church leased it for a few years, but finding as the house became old that it produced no income, sold it in 1717 to the trustees of the collegiate school, who immediately began the erection of the first college building, which was finished the next year. It was of wood, fronting on College st., 170 feet long by 22 feet wide, and three stories high. In 1718 it received the name of Yale College in gratitude to Gov. Elihu Yale, who, between 1714 and 1718, had contributed largely to the school. This building stood about 64 years. It was taken down in 1782. The South College, the old Chapel, now the Athenaeum, built 1761, and the South Middle stand on this plot. The latter was begun in 1750 and is the oldest building on the College Square.

The Tuttle homestead was the only land owned by the college for nearly thirty years. It was the first of a long series of purchases extending through a period of more than a century, which finally brought the whole of the College Square into its possession. In these transfers, descendants of Wm. Tuttle, who at one time or another owned a considerable part of the square, appear as grantors, either directly to the college or to intermediate holders.

The corporation is now a great landed proprietor. Hence a peculiar interest attaches to this, its first acquisition of real estate. It is now 243 years since its purchase from the Indians, during which period it has been held by but five proprietors, viz.: Joshua Atwater, 16 yrs.; William Tuttle and heirs, 30 yrs.; Hester Coster, 5 yrs.; the First Church of New Haven, 26 yrs.; Yale College, 166 yrs.

On this very spot where William Tuttle lived and died, his great-grandson, Jonathán Edwards, studied, taught and achieved his "great and excellent tutorial renown." It is now and long has been the chosen gathering place of the students, where, at leisure hours, they meet for general purposes or for social intercourse.

It is here that the class histories are recited, the last fundangos of the seniors performed, and the fence given away.*

*The fence enclosing this part of the campus seems to possess peculiar attractions to the students. On almost any fine day during sessions may be seen a long row of youths seated close together on the top rail, and looking at a distance like some strange sort of fowl gone early to roost. The corporation no doubt would cheerfully furnish settees on the campus as a substitute, but that would not do. The fence fills all requirements, and is valued accordingly. The Chapel street side from the South College, about half way to College street, is sacred to the Seniors. Thence, to the College st. corner is the exclusive property of the Juniors. The Sophomores crown the College st. rail. Beyond, there is plenty of room for the Freshmen, but they are not permitted to sit on the fence, and woe to the fledgeling who should dare to transgress this unwritten but inexorable law; though an exception is made in favor of any hero of the bat or oar who has helped to win a college race or game of ball. To such the privilege of the fence on the College st. side, below the Sophs., but nowhere else, is granted as a reward. To all others it is strictly forbidden.

Every year, a few days before Commencement, the fence is given away by the Seniors to the Juniors. By the Juniors to the Sophs., and by the latter to the class below. The writer had the good fortune to witness the transfer of '82. Citizens as well as students were present in large numbers, filling the campus, the adjoining streets and sidewalks and the balconies and windows of the neighboring hotels and houses. Class orators, mounted on express wagons, made witty presentation speeches, which were replied to in the same spirit, accompanied by uproarious laughter and clapping of hands by the audience. The whole proceeding was full of that rollicking spirit of fun which only students near the long vacation can fully realize.

In the evening twilight the place is often vocal with college songs, which seem to burst forth spontaneously, and are caught up by young voices here and there until the full chorus fills the surrounding space and the "Cathedral Aisle*" of the overarching elms; awakening in the minds of listeners poetical reminiscences of other lands, where, more than in this, such sounds are heard in songs and vesper hymns.

Other and more intimate associations than those of successive occupancy and ownership of the same local habitation, connect this history of a family with that of Yale College. Of its ten thousand academical graduates, at least four hundred, or one in twenty-five, are known to be of this lineage or affinity, and so of its professional schools. Its officers, tutors, professors and fellows will be found in these pages in a still larger ratio; and of its eleven presidents, two not the least honored of the list, ruled over its destinies for more than one-fourth of the entire period of its existence to the present time.

The lands outside the town plot were divided to the proprietors or their representatives from time to time, according to a rule based on the amount of rates paid, and on the number of persons in the proprietor's family, counting husband, wife and children only. In the first division made in 1640, William Tuttle is rated at £400 of estate and seven persons, showing that the schedule was made before the birth of Joseph, who was bap. Nov. 22, of that year. Of the one hundred and two proprietors, there were thirty whose rates exceeded his, though none were above £1,000, excepting Gov. Eaton's, which was £3,000. In the second division Wm. Tuttle's proportion was 107 acres. There is no record of the "lay out" of the first and second divisions, but in August, 1640, fifty acres of meadow land were granted to Mr. Samuel Eaton, and at the same time Mr. Wm. Tuttle and Benj. Ling were allowed to have their meadow land "where Mr. Eaton hath his first fifty acres, namely, in the fresh meadows toward Totoket (Branford)." This is probably the locality referred to in the record of a court held at New Haven, Feb. 1, 1647, when Ezekiel Cheever passed over to John Cooper five and a half acres of outland within the two miles, one-half of it lying in Mr. Eaton's quarter, between land of Mrs. Turner and Wm. Tuthill, the other half lying by the mill highway at the end of Mr. Eaton's pasture, next to the land of Wm. Tuthill. The same year Mr. Perry conveyed land "one end butting on the mill road between land of Wm. Tuttle and Francis Newman."

In 1644 Mr. Tuthill was granted liberty to enlarge his rate to £450, and if he removes to sell only improvements and outlands in second division and Neck. Trumbull says: "The proprietors soon began to cultivate their lands on the East Haven side, and in 1644 Thomas Gregson built the first house. William Edwards (father of Richard, who m. Elizabeth Tuttle), Jasper Crane, Wm. Tuttle and others soon followed." Mr. Tuttle may have lived in E. Haven awhile before buying the Atwater property, but I have found no evidence that he ever removed his family from New Haven.

Capt. Charles H. Townshend says that Wm. Tuttle and Mr. Gregson were the first owners of land in East Haven, and that Mr. Tuttle surveyed and laid out the road from the ferry at Red Rock to Stony River, that his land in E. Haven was bounded by a line running from the old Ferry (where the new bridge over the Quinnipiac is) eastward to a spring where issues the small stream called "Tuttle's Brook," thence south along Tuttle's Brook to Mr. Gregson's land at Solitary Cove, thence west to a point on the New Haven Harbor near the chemical works and Fort Hale, thence north along the harbor line to the point of beginning. The tract was large and much of it may have been obtained by purchase of the original grantees or of their successors. It included Tuttle's Hill. It was mostly divided up and sold by the heirs to the Hughes, Woodwards, and others. The Forbes and Luddingtons came into possession by marriage with female heirs. Isaac and Kneeland Townsend bought the interest of several of the heirs of Joseph Tuttle, which is now part of the fine estate in E. Haven called Raynham, the family seat of the Townsends.

In 1659 Mr. Tuttle appears as proprietor of land in North Haven that had belonged to the estate of Gov. Eaton (Davis' Hist. of Wallingford); the same perhaps that his son Jonathan Tuttle settled on in 1670. There were lands in Bethany and elsewhere acquired by purchase in his life, or set off to his heirs or representatives in the third and in latter divisions after his death.

In 1661 John Punderson alienated to Mr. Tuttle his dwelling house and home lot, and seven acres of land with two houses on it, which Mr. T. at once gave to his son John.

There was an interval of near forty years between the 2d and 3d divisions. In 1672 William Jones, Matthew Gilbert, Capt. John Nash, James Bishop, Mr. William Tuttle, Roger Alling, Samuel Whitehead, David Atwater, Jonathan Osborn, Alling Ball, and James Eaton, were commissioned to locate such lands as may stand for town commons, and such as are fit for a third division.—Proprietor's Record. The third division was made in 1680. There were several divisions after the third, but the last original proprietor had passed away long before, and their heirs or representatives had in many instances disposed of their rights in advance and removed. It is evident that William Tuttle was sometime a very large land owner, and that he must have sold or divided up among his children the greater part of it before his death. Subsequently the records of conveyances by his sons of lands in possession, and of proprietary rights are numerous.

"SEATING THE MEETING HOUSE."

One of the earliest matters to engage the attention of the colonists was the building of the meeting house, immediately followed by the solemn and weighty matter of "seating" it. This custom was general in primitive New England. A committee of grave men, appointed for the purpose, graded the seats and "dignified" them according to some rule, propinquity to the pulpit perhaps, by which they were esteemed more or less honorable. The people were then voted into them one by one, in accordance with certain prescribed rules. The rules at New Haven were doubtless similar to those on record at Wethersfield, where a committee of seven men appointed to "seat the meeting house" were instructed by a vote of the town to observe the following rules of precedence: 1st, Dignity of descent. 2d, Place of Public Trust. 3d, Pious Disposition. 4th, Estate. 5th, Peculiar serviceableness of any kind.

"This," says Dr. Bacon in his New Haven Historical Discourses, "affords us a glimpse of the associations and relative social importance of the first settlers of New Haven."

The first "seating" in New Haven was in 1646-7. "Mr. Tuttle, Mr. Pell* and brother Fowler† were voted into the first cross seat at the end." This was near the pulpit and among the highest in dignity. The women sat by themselves and it is very likely were placed by similar considerations so far as they were applicable. In the 5th seat in the middle sat Mrs. Tuttle, the wife of Mr. Gibbs; Mrs. Newman, wife of Francis,‡ who was her next door neighbor; the wife of Jasper Crane§ and the wife of Joshua Atwater.

In 1655-6 another assignment of seats was made. In the first cross seat at the upper end, Mr. Tuttle, Mr. John Davenport (son of the minister), Mr. Fowler and Mr. Allerton,

*Mr. Pell. Thomas, son of Sir John Pell of London, was surgeon at the Saybrook Fort, under Lyon Gardiner in 1636, and in that capacity was sent with Capt. Underhill to the Pequot war in 1637. About 1647 he m. the widow of Francis Brewster. Before her m. to Mr. Pell a fine had been imposed by the Court which she refused to pay, and Mr. Pell, after marrying her, was held responsible, which he also refused. After a good deal of difficulty about the payment, and declining when called upon to take the oath of fidelity, he went away, probably to Fairfield. His wife and dau. were witnesses in the case of Staples against Ludlow.—Bacon's Hist. Desc. In Ballou's Hist. of Westchester Co. may be found an extended account of Pell. He was of an old Northamptonshire family. He obtained by purchase or grant a large tract in Westchester Co., N. Y., probably by authority of the Conn. Leg., afterwards known as the Manor of Pelham, of which the present Pelhamville is a part. This tract was ratified by Gov. Nichols to John Pelham, gent., in 1666. In 1669 the patentee devised the whole tract to his nephew, John Pell [commonly called Lord Pell], who obtained a further confirmation of the grant from Gov. Dongan in 1687. Two yrs. afterwards John and Rachel [Pinckney] Pell conveyed to Jacob Leisler, merchant of N. Y., [who acted in behalf of the Huguenots] six thousand acres, now the township of New Rochelle, N. Y. The grantee and his heirs pay to said John Pell and his heirs, as Lords of said Manor, one fat calf on the 24th of June annually if demanded. Consideration £1675 sterling. When the fat calf was demanded each Huguenot paid his proportion. Pell also gave one hundred acres for the benefit of the French church. Rachel, his wife, made her mark, "R." In 1691 Leisler was executed in New York for high treason, having undoubtedly assumed and exercised authority as Gov. and Commander-in-Chief of New York. Thomas Pell d. s. l., 1669, a. 61 yrs. His only brother, John Pell, D. D., of London, an eminent mathematician and author of several learned works, was Cromwell's envoy to the Swiss Canton in the time of the Pretectorate. "The family is one of great antiquity." (See Ency. Brit. for biog. of John Pell, D. D.)

†"Brother Fowler" [William] was a magistrate.

‡Francis Newman was Gov. of the Colony.

§Jasper Crane and Wm. Tuttle were much associated in public affairs and were probably personal friends. They were associated as "fence viewers," and in the East Haven settlement, and as leaders in the Delaware enterprise. He was many years a magistrate. He removed to Brantford 1652. He was one of the most prominent of the founders of Newark in 1666 where his name stands at the head of the list of proprietors preceding even that of the Rev. Abraham Pierson. The Milford people soon followed and the name of Robert Treat, afterwards Gov. of Conn., is first. In 1668 Treat and Crane were the first representatives of Newark in the N. J. Legislature. Mary Treat, dau. of Gov. Robert, m. Dea. Azariah Crane, son of Jasper.

Sen.* In the 4th long seat Mrs. Gibbard, Mrs. Tuttle, Goodwife Gibbs and Goodwife Davis. At this seating Jonathan Tuttle, James Eaton, John Clark and Isaac Turner (son of Capt. Nathaniel) were placed together.

In 1661-2 another assignment of seats was made. In the third long seat Mr. Goodenhausen, (Samuel Van Goodenhausen, who married the widow of Capt. Nathaniel Turner), Mr. Tuttle, William Judson (grandfather of James Judson, who married William Tuttle's granddaughter, Rebecca Wells), John Gibbs and Lieut. Nash. On the women's side, in the third long seat, "Sisters Miles, Peck, Lindon, Tuttle and Gibbard."

THE DELAWARE EXPEDITION.

In 1640 Capt. Nathaniel Turner, as agent for parties in New Haven, bought of the Indians a large tract of land lying on both sides of the Delaware river, in what is now Salem Co., N. J., on the east, and in New Castle, Co., Del., on the west.

The object was to plant a colony under the jurisdiction of New Haven, for purposes of trade and commerce. The next year (1641) nearly fifty families were sent to the new purchase. They settled on Salem Creek and erected dwellings and trading houses. This was the first English settlement in New Jersey. It preceded that at Elizabethtown (the first permanent English settlement in New Jersey) by twenty-four years.

In 1638 a company of Swedes, led by Peter Minuit (a disaffected ex-Dutch governor of New Amsterdam), had located themselves at "Christina," on the west side of the Delaware, nearly opposite the mouth of Salem Creek. These Swedes and Dutch, who would agree in nothing else, says the historian, united in persecuting the English, and succeeding in driving them off in 1642.

New Haven made a second attempt about 1644, which was frustrated by the Dutch at New Amsterdam. These, with other and subsequent grievances, always came up for consideration and protest in the meetings of the commissioners of the United Colonies, and formed the staple of the official correspondence between Gov. Eaton and "one troublesome neighbor" at New Amsterdam. Finally an agreement between the commissioners and the Dutch governor was signed at Hartford, Sept. 3, 1650. It established certain boundaries, redressed certain wrongs, and in regard to the Delaware matter left "both parties in statu quo prius to plead and improve their just rights, but all proceedings to be carried on in love and peace, until the question could be decided here or by the parent governments of England and Holland." In pursuance of this apparent settlement, about fifty men of Totoket and New Haven, in the spring of 1651, hired a vessel, put their effects on board and set sail for the Delaware.†

They had a warrant from Governor Eaton, and he wrote a friendly letter to the Dutch governor, acquainting him with their intentions; giving him to understand that, according to the arbitration at Hartford, they would cultivate their own lands, and keep within their own limits. But no sooner was his letter received, than the Dutch claims were again set up; the people of New Haven, who meditated a farther settlement at Delaware, and an additional improvement of their interests, under an apprehension of peace and safety, were threatened with martial opposition and bloodshed. They were perfidiously seized and made close prisoners at New York, nor could they obtain their liberty, until they gave it under their hands, that they would give over their enterprise and return to New Haven. They were threatened by the governor that if at any future period he should find them on the Delaware, he would not only lay hold on their property, but transmit them as prisoners to Holland. This company was nearly ruined, and the colony of New Haven was greatly injured by this repetition of hostility on the part of the Dutch.

In the same year a meeting of the commissioners was held at New Haven, September 14th. Of this meeting Governor Eaton was chosen President. The meeting was no sooner convened than the following communication was made to its members:

*Isaac Allerton came over in the Mayflower; he was by trade a tailor. On the death of John Carver the first Gov. of Plymouth Colony, he was made Assistant. "Isaac Allerton, a sea Capt., removed from Boston to New Haven and built a grand house, with four porches, on the Creek; this, with Eaton's, Davenport's and Gregson's were the grandest houses in the town. Davenport's house had thirteen fireplaces." [Noted by Dr. Stiles as traditions in History of the Judges.] Mr. Allerton removed to New Amsterdam where he had great storehouses and carried on an extensive trade with the New England Colonies. An old map of Wambados or New Amsterdam, as it was in September, 1661, shows Isaac Allerton's buildings surrounded by a fence, close to the site of Fulton Market.

On a brick building now standing on the southwest corner of Union and Fair sts. in N. Hav., the Trowbridges have this year [1881] placed a tablet inscribed: "Isaac Allerton, a pilgrim of the Mayflower and the father of New England commerce, lived on this ground from 1646 until 1659."

†The people of New Haven, not satisfied with the location, proposed to remove to a tract on the Delaware, and in 1651 urgently requested Capt. John Mason to remove with them and take the management of the company. He was on the point of accepting their liberal offers, when the Conn. authorities interfered with entreaties and refusal to consent.—Life of John Mason.

"The humble petition of Jasper Crane, William Tuttle and many others, inhabitants of New Haven and Totoket, humbly Showeth,—

"That, whereas, divers years since several merchants and others of New Haven, with much charge and loss, did purchase of the Indian sagamores and their companies, the true proprietors, several large tracts and parcels of lands on both sides of Delaware bay and river, and did presently begin to build and set up factories for trade, and purposed to set up plantations within their own limits; whereby the gospel also might have been carried and spread among the Indians in that most southerly part of New England, and the United Colonies might before this time have been enlarged with convenience both for themselves and posterity, had not the whole work by hostile and injurious opposition, made both by the Dutch and Swedes, been then injured. And whereas your petitioners, straightened in their respective plantations, and finding this part of the country full, or affording little encouragement to begin any considerable new plantations, for their own comfort and the convenience of posterity, did, upon a serious consideration of the premises, and upon encouragement of the treaty between the honored Commissioners and the Dutch governor, the last year at Connecticut, by agreement and consent of the said merchants and others, resolve upon a more difficult remove to Delaware; hoping that our aims and endeavors both to God and his people in these colonies, being assured our title to the place was just, and resolving (through the help of God) in all our carriages and proceedings to hold and maintain a neighborly correspondence of the Dutch and Swedes, as was assured them, both by the tenor of the commissions, and by letters from the honored governor of this jurisdiction.

"To these ends and with these purposes, preparations were made in the winter; a vessel was hired, and at least fifty of us set forward in the spring, and expecting the fruit of that wholesome advice, given at Hartford the last year in the case, by the arbitrators jointly. Those chosen by the Dutch governor concurring in it, we went to the Manhattoes, (which we might have avoided) and from our honored governor presented a letter to the Dutch governor; upon perusal whereof, without further provocation, he arrested the two messengers and committed them to a private house, close prisoners, under a guard. That done, he sent for the master of the vessel to come on shore, as to speak to him, and committed him also; after which, two or more of the company coming on shore, and desiring to speak with their neighbors under restraint, he committed them as the rest. Then desiring to see our commissions and copy them out, promising to return them the next day, (though the copies were taken and the commissions demanded) he refused to deliver them, and kept them and the men imprisoned till they were forced to engage under their hands, not then to proceed on their voyage towards Delaware, but with loss of time, and charge to return to New Haven; threatening, that if he should after find any of them in Delaware, he would seize their goods, and send their persons prisoners to Holland; and accordingly they returned, though their damage thereby, as they conceive, doth amount to about £300. All which, your petitioners refer to your wise and serious consideration; and, being well assured you will have due respect to the honor of the English nation, which now suffers by this injurious affront, taken notice of by all the neighboring Indians, they humbly desire that some course may be agreed and ordered for the due repair of their losses, satisfaction for their unjust imprisonment, with liberty and encouragement to improve their just rights at Delaware, for the future.

"For which purpose they humbly offer to consideration:—

"First.—That Delaware, in the judgment of those who have often and seriously viewed the land, and considered the climate, is a place fit for the enlargement of the English colonies at present, and hopeful for posterity; that we and they might enjoy the ordinances of Christ, both in spiritual and civil respects.

"Secondly.—They fear, that if the English right be not seasonably vindicated, and a way opened for the speedy planting of Delaware, the Dutch, who have laid already an injurious hand both upon our persons and rights (they having, as it is reported, lately begun a new fortification upon our duly purchased lands), will daily strengthen themselves, and, by large offers, draw many of the English to settle and plant under them, in so hopeful a place, which will be not only dishonorable to the English nation, but inconvenient to the colonies, and of mischievous consequences to the persons who shall so settle, in reference to that licentious liberty there suffered and practiced.

"Thirdly.—As the petitioners have not in their eye, any other considerable place within the limits of New England, either for the enlargement of the colonies at present, or for the comfort and convenience of posterity; so if the Dutch may thus oppose us in our persons and rights, if they may plant and fortify upon the land which themselves, the English, Swedes and Indians know to be ours, it may encourage them to encroach and make further hostile attempts upon some or other of the smaller English plantations, to bring them under their government, and may animate the Indians (with whom the Dutch ingratiate themselves by a large, constant, and mischievous trade in guns, powder and shot) to despise, and make insults upon us. Wherefore, they again humbly entreat your advice, with seasonable and suitable assistance, according to the weight and import of the case, that all your consultations and labor may tend and issue in the honor of Christ, and the welfare of the colonies."*

In consequence of this representation of the Dutch conduct, the commissioners remonstrated and protested in a letter written to Gov. Stuyvesant, noticing his sentiments contained in the letter which he had sent to Governor Eaton, relative to the Delaware settlement, his violation of the agreement in refusing to put Greenwich under New Haven jurisdiction, in imprisoning a number of the colonists, withholding their commissions, and rendering their voyage ineffectual; and also, in their attempting to establish fortifications upon the land which the New Haven proprietors had purchased of the native proprietors at Delaware. They declared that the United Colonies would, by all just and lawful means, vindicate their injured honor and interests. They also resolved in behalf of the petitioners, that if they should attempt in the course of the year to effect a settlement on their lands at Delaware, and at their own expense send 150, or at least 100 men, well armed, in a vessel or any number of vessels for such an expedition, with a suitable quantity of ammunition, and with a regular commission from New Haven government, that then, if the Dutch or Swedes should attempt to oppose them, the United Colonies would furnish them with an armed force sufficient for their defense. And they further resolved that every English plantation on Delaware bay and river, from New Haven, or any of the United Colonies, should be under the government of New Haven.—Biog. of Gov. Eaton.

This matter is referred to by the commissioners of the United Colonies (in answer to a letter from Edward Winslow), under date New Haven, Sept. 11, 1651: "We understand that Mr. Eaton hath written to you about the just title to considerable parts of lands on both sides of Delaware bay and river; how they were formerly disturbed in their trade and planting by force and other unlawful practices, both of Dutch and Swedes, yourself may remember, and he hath acquainted you with a late unneighborly and imperious carriage of the Dutch governor, when at least fifty of New Haven jurisdiction were on the way to plant there, but were seized, imprisoned and forced to return with great loss to those interested in that design, and hath derived your help in procuring a patent. These things by a petition from those concerned in the late loss and dis-appointment have been recommended to our consideration.

"We are justly sensible of the dishonor put upon the English nation by this unjust affair and of our duty to preserve the title to so considerable a place as Delaware, and that a just repair and satisfaction be made to those wronged, both in their persons and estate." The letter concludes with inquiries about old patents and improvements on the Delaware, and how an engagement by the United Colonies against the Dutch would be regarded by the Parliament.

Gov. Eaton and the New Haven people were incensed against New Amsterdam, and had the other New England colonies made common cause with New Haven, a war with the Dutch might have ensued. "Every one expects a righteous indignation." In 1653 a wall was built on Manhattan Island as a defense against an expected invasion by the Puritan colonists of New England. The Historical Magazine for May, 1883, contains a picture of this wall. From it a famous street took its name (Wall street) and preserves the memory of its location.

It was certainly very unfortunate for Wm. Tuttle that he undertook this enterprise, for it involved him in considerable loss and disappointment at a time when the prospects of the New Haven settlement were very dark indeed; but it was a most happy thing for him, his family, posterity and country, that it utterly failed. In view of results as we see them to-day, the short sightedness of man and the beneficent overruling of Providence were never more clearly displayed. In 1652 the Swedish Governor, Printz, erected a fort at the mouth of Salem Creek as a defence against the Dutch, but it was no sooner occupied than it was "stormed by an enemy more active than the Dutch and more bloodthirsty than the Indians, and the garrison put to flight." The name of Muschetoesburg by which it was known thenceforth sufficiently indicates the character and success of the conquerors. In the two and a quarter centuries which have "circled away" since that event the United Colonies have expanded to "The United States," with a population more than five times greater than that of England and Holland combined in 1650. Great cities and prosperous communities have grown up around and beyond the disputed territory, to the utmost limit of the then unexplored continent; but the conquerors of the New Jersey Swedes still hold the fort, and the Delaware purchase remains in a condition but little if any improved from that in which Captain Turner found it. About fifteen years later some of these same men of Totoket, with others from Milford, headed by Jasper Crane and Rev. Abraham Pierson, father of the first President of Yale college, Robert Treat and Obadiah Bruen, founded on the banks of Passaic, a place at first called Milford (after the Connecticut town), now the city of Newark, N. J.

Failing in his commercial aspirations and enterprises, Mr. Tuttle betook himself, like his fellow colonists to the cultivation of the soil. In the care of his large family and property and in the performance of his public duties he doubtless found ample employment of mind and body. Besides the education and support of his children, numerous public duties devolved upon him—watchings, trainings, arbitrations between contending settlers, disputed boundaries of farms and towns, Juror, Constable, Road Commissioner, buying and selling of lands and we know not what besides. The Colonial records gives us an idea of the diversity of his activities and occupations.

In 1640 he was a commissioner to decide on an equivalent to those who had received inferior meadow lands in the first allotment.

In 1644 Mr. Wm. Tuttle and Jasper Crane were appointed fence viewers for Mr. Davenport's quarter. One of the duties pertaining to this office appears from the "petition of Robert Abbott and Wm. Paine to have their land on the east side laid out in a convenient form to fence. Jasper Crane and Wm. Tuttle were appointed to view it and consider how to lay it out." They located allotments and defined boundaries and in some other respects were the predecessors of the modern city or town surveyors in their official capacity.

He seems to have performed the duties of a Road Commissioner, for at a court held July 17, 1646, James Steward was complained of for contempt of Magistrate.* He was wanted to work on roads but had no tools. Mr. Tuttle testified that he offered to lend him tools, provided he would make them good if he broke them; but Steward answered that he would not enter into their claws or paws. John Cooper testified that being one morning with Mr. Tuttle at the gate, James Steward came along with his cattle, and said: "What! Must I help you work?" Then John Cooper said: "You must help the town." James answered, he was unsuited and wanted tools. Mr. Tuttle offered him tools, but if he break them he shall make them good. He said "Noe, he would not come into their claws and paws; whereupon Mr. Tuttle said he must make good the tools."

In 1646 Mr. Tuttle and Jeremy Watts were complained of for sleeping at the watch house. Mr. Tuttle said he was overcome, and Jeremy being sentinel, he sat down on the threshold and slept. They were both fined.

He was prominent in the settlement of boundary difficulties. At a town meeting, April 11, 1653, "It was ordered concerning the Indian lands spoken of at the last court that Thomas Jeffrey, John Brockett, William Tuttle and Robert Talmadge should be committee to view the ground which they say is theirs, and to advise them for the best about fencing, etc., that we may not have so much complaint from them about cattle and hogs spoiling their corn, which they say makes their squaws and children cry."—Bacon's Hist. Disc.

In the trouble about bounds between Branford and New Haven, James Bishop, Lieut. Thomas Munson, Wm. Andrews, John Moss and John Cooper, sr., were chosen as commissioners for New Haven; afterwards, Wm. Tuttle was substituted for John Cooper. Branford chose John Wilford, Thos. Blatchley, Michael Taintor, Thos. Harris and Samuel Ward. These commissioners met Oct. 5, 1669, and after full debate and consideration the bounds were set and the case forever ended.—Conn. Hist. Soc. Papers.

A boundary agreement between New Haven, Milford, Branford and Wallingford was subscribed to May 1, 1672, by John Nash, John Cooper, Wm. Tuttle, Jeremiah Osborn, John Miles and John Clark, for New Haven; and Benjamin Fenn, Wm. Fowler, Daniel Buckingham, Sylvanus Baldwin and others, for Milford.—Ibid.

In personal misunderstandings and disagreements among the colonists Mr. Tuttle was often called upon for advice or arbitration. "At a court in Jan., 1646, Mr. Pell, plaintiff, Mr. Caffinch, defendant, for £50, were entreated by the court to put it into arbitration. Mr. Pell chose Anthony Thompson; Mr. Caffinch chose Mr. Tuttle, to whom were added Mr., (afterwards Gov.) Francis Newman and Mr. Crane."

*In the same year, 1646, Thomas Blakesley of New Haven was fined for "disrespect to the image of God in the Magistrates," a somewhat lofty assumption of the sacredness of authority for men who some three years later justified the decapitation of a king by his own subjects.

"At a court held Sept. 8, 1648, Henry Bishop stated that he had a difficulty with Mr. Davenport and had asked arbitration, but could get none. Had asked Mr. Wake-man, Mr. Tuttle and Mr. Richard Miles. The court thought they were fit men."

Courts, consisting of the Governor or Deputy Governor, two or three Magistrates or "Assistants," as they were called, and six jurors, selected from among the best men, were held from time to time for the trial of various causes.

In the records of these courts, Wm. Tuttle often appears as a juror, his title of Mr. always punctiliously observed. The following record shows how sparingly it was bestowed: "At a court held Nov. 10, 1669, Mr. Wm. Leete, Dep. Gov. Mr. Benj. Fenn, Mr. Wm. Jones and James Bishop, assistants; Roger Alling, John Cooper, Abraham Doolittle, John Winston, John Osborn and Mr. Wm. Tuttle, jurors." James Bishop was a representative or member of the General Court, Secretary of State and afterwards Dep. Gov. Roger Alling was Treasurer of the Colony and dea. of the church. John Cooper was Agent of the Iron Works at East Haven. Abraham Doolittle was Sheriff of New Haven County, and in this very year of 1669 was chosen to superintend the affairs of the new settlement at Wallingford. John Winston and John Osborn do not appear prominently in public employment. The latter is the ancestor of the New Haven Osborns. A daughter (Elizabeth) of John Winston was wife of Samuel Alling, son of Roger. Another daughter (Mary) was wife of Thomas Trowbridge and ancestress of the present New Haven family. Mr. Tuttle was Juror again in July, Nov. 8 and Nov. 25, 1671, and he is last recorded in this capacity, June 12, 1672, about a year before his decease.

In March, 1666-7, William Tuttle took the Constable's oath.

In 1664 Mr. Tuttle expounded to the court about taking the youngest child of Robert Hill, the widow being willing to part with it. In the afternoon the court considered the matter. June 7, 1664, Mr. Tuttle informed the court that his cousin, Widow Hill, had come to an agreement with him about Nathaniel. The court advised it put in writing and recorded.

In 1664 a young girl was charged with pilfering from her master and from others, among other things some liquors. She tried to implicate Mercy Tuttle in the crime by saying that Mercy met her at Goodman Thorpe's and drank some of the liquor. Mercy (aged 14) denied it and the charge as to her was shown to be utterly false. The girl's crime, therefore, was aggravated by lying and bearing false witness. Before sentence was pronounced, Mr. Wm. Tuttle, having liberty to speak, addressed the court, and "with great affection" said the young girl's sin was very great, yet he did much pity her, and he hoped the Court would deal leniently with her and put her in some pious family where she could enjoy the means of Grace for her soul's good." The Court, in consideration of this appeal, and of the fact that others against whom she had offended had not made complaint, said that her punishment should be as light as comported with a proper sense of the heinousness of her sin, and "for her soul's good" she was sentenced "to be publicly and severely whipped, tomorrow after lecture." It is a gratification to find that our ancestor's ideas about the public whipping-post as a means of grace or as an instrumentality for the reformation of young girls were somewhat in advance of his time.

The exact date of his death does not appear. It was in the early days of June, 1673. The record of his inventory follows immediately after that of Benjamin Ling, which was taken June 6, 1673. At a court held June 19, 1673, a paper was shown by which Wm. Tuttoll and John Tuttoll conveyed to Wm. Bassett a lot of 60 acres of outland on west side of New Haven East River, (Quinnipiac) running from the Meadows westward towards Mill River, bounded in part by land of Wm. Potter and Thomas Beaumont. Wm. Tuttoll died before signing the deed.

Court, June 8, 1674, Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttoll said: "My late husband, Mr. Wm. Tuttoll of New Haven sold unto John Jones of New Haven 60 acres of outland near Stony River, being part of his 2d division, and Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttoll, wid. and relict and lawful administratrix of deceased, desired it might be recorded to Joane Jones, wid. of John.

Signed,

E. (Her mark).

Mr. Wm. Tuttoll, about a fortnight before his death, appeared before James Bishop, Assistant, and acknowledged sale and satisfaction and desired it might be recorded to Widow Jones.

No will or mention of will has been found, and it is probable that he made none, his wid. calling herself his lawful administratrix, and that he died suddenly.

His dust lies under the sod of the Old Green, exactly where, we know not. As social distinction was never lost sight of even in the place of graves, we may conclude that he was buried among the honored men of the colony.

The last remainder of his estate was distributed in 1709 to his children, or to their heirs. It was divided into eleven parts. Joseph Tuttle, a grandson, appealed from this division to the court at Hartford, and deposited bonds to the amount of £20 to make his plea good.

From the foregoing we may infer that Wm. Tuttle was the equal, socially, of any of the colonists; that he lived and brought up his children in a manner befitting his condition, and carefully provided for them the means of starting in life. That he was a man of courage, enterprise, intelligence, probity and piety; a just man, whose counsels and judgments were sought to calm the contentions and adjust the differences of jarring neighbors, and withal, of a tenderness of heart unusual in men whose lives were passed in strife and conflict with despotism, barbarism, and the savage forces of nature. Through all these years, that may truly be said to have tried men's souls, and to the last, he possessed the respect and confidence of men whose souls were tried like his own.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tuttle died Dec. 30, 1684, aged 72 years. She had been living with her youngest son, Nathaniel, who, at a court held in New Haven, July 28, 1685, presented her will, but "the other children objected and the court would not allow it." The inventory (App. 603), taken Feb. 3, 1685, by Moses Mansfield and John Alling. It indicates a ladylike refinement in apparel and household appointments. That she was a faithful and true wife and mother we have good reason to believe. All her twelve children were reared to maturity amid privations, dangers and trials, of which the mothers of the present day can hardly form a conception, and which very few indeed would have the courage to face or the strength to endure. In her widowhood, heavy afflictions were added to her weight of years, but the religious faith and hope which she publicly professed in her youth, no doubt supported her as nothing else could do through all the dark and troubled way, and unto the end. The name of Elizabeth was a favorite one among her children and later descendants, especially in the line of her namesake and daughter, while that of William (singularly) was not given to any of the eight sons, and to but one of the numerous grandsons.

Her grave stone was removed with the others in 1821, from the Old Green to the Grove street cemetery, and it now stands in the row along the north wall of that enclosure. A part of the inscription is still plain; a part is obscure by the crumbling of the stone, and a part is entirely gone. Some "Old Mortality" has recently retouched the letters, and brought out a few that were before uncertain. It is still but a fragment, like a faint and broken whisper from the far distant and still receding past:

*John and James Clark in New Haven, 1630. John three polls, rate £240. James four persons, rate £50; removed to Stratford. In History of Southington, Conn., Samuel is called son of James. John S. Clark, Esq., of Auburn, N. Y., thinks Samuel was of Lieut. William Clark's family, who came from England to Dorchester in 1637, to Northampton, 1650, and d. 1696. His son William removed to Lebanon, Conn., and had among others Thomas and Timothy, the latter resided in Lebanon. If I am not mistaken in the identity of Joseph (114) as the grantor in 1734 to Ebenezer Beecher of right in land laid out to Grandfather John Clark, then it follows that John was father of Samuel. The latter was doubtless nearly related to at least two of the three Windham county Clark families. In Lebanon very early there were descendants of three distinct families of this name, viz.: Lieut. William, named above; Daniel, secretary of the colony, and John. In 1785 a Phinehas John and Timothy Clark in Mansfield petitioned to be annexed to Hampton, being within four miles from that meeting house.

†In 1734 John Clark and wife, Deborah, of New Haven, conveyed to Capt. Dickerman right in land laid out to Nathaniel Potter. Perhaps he removed to Windham county.

He d. about three mos. after his wif., aged 82. They lived together 60 years, had six chil., of whom two d. yg. Chloe Lankton.—While waiting for the cars at New Hartford the other day, I called on Chloe Lankton, who, as your readers know, has been confined to her bed for the last forty-seven years. At the age of eighteen she lost the use of her limbs, and from that time has been unable to walk a step. Although in constant and severe bodily pain, she is sociable, pleasant, and looks younger than many women of forty. Her hair is a darkish brown, her eyes retain all their youthful lustre, her manner resigned, hopeful and patient. Her complexion is good, and in short she is a pleasant, good looking person.

Her present home is a story and a half house, painted white, and stands about forty rods west of the Connecticut Western depot on the north side of the road. The room she occupies fronts the street on one side. A low, broad window has been substituted for a narrow one, adding a great deal to the cheerfulness of the room. The place was a present to her. Mr. Russell Sturges, a Boston millionaire, contributed a hundred dollars, Professor Morse, of telegraphic renown, another hundred; friends in New York and Philadelphia gave considerable, while friends at home, and Sunday schools at home and away from home have all helped to raise the cost of the place—$800 I think—and it is now hers, a fact for which Chloe Lankton is very thankful.

In 1859 the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia published a sketch of her life, a copy of which I remember to have read some years ago. Her room is a perfect museum of curiosities, which she enjoys showing. She has perfect use of her hands, using them to make an endless variety of fancy articles, some of which find a slow sale. Physiologically, Chloe Lankton is an interesting study. That any mortal can live nearly half a century, suffering intense burning pain year after year, spending the long, weary hours in bed in a 10x12 room, with the dull certainty that as long as she lives her sufferings will increase rather than lessen, and still look as young and happy as she does, is certainly most extraordinary.—M. J. W. in Litchfield Inquirer, 1877.

The sketch above referred to is a 12 mo. of 266 pp., entitled, "Chloe Lankton, or Light Beyond the Clouds, a Story of Real Life." It contains her portrait and an engraving of her home. It is one of the most beautifully written, pathetic and absorbing of stories.—Comp.

II. Isaac, b. July 19, 1761; d. April 28, 1845, aged 84; rem. to Wolcott 1794. When between 5 and 6 he began to learn his letters; before he was 8 years old he had read the Bible through in course and also every other book he could lay his hands on. His thirst for reading and knowledge was insatiable. His days were spent in fruitless wishes and his nights in dreams of books, and of college and of learning, for years together, until seeing no opportunity of obtaining a college education, he became greatly discouraged as to life, indifferent, and exceedingly bashful. His bashfulness was intensified by a strict and repressive home government—being well "kept under"; which, joined with his despondent state of mind, he says, nearly proved his ruin. This reserve, sensitiveness, and diffidence, gave to his usual manner and deportment an appearance of coldness and indifference to others, which was in fact the complete opposite of his real character, for "a warmer heart, probably, did not beat in Wolcott" than his. Hence in his addresses and prayers at funerals he was captivating and moving to a remarkable degree. All now living who have heard him say they "never heard his equal at funerals." His address on the death of Washington is spoken of as the most remarkable production of the kind ever heard in the town, and was talked of as such for years. The same is said of an address he gave at a conference of churches at Cheshire. It is not surprising therefore, that he is spoken of as "The great man of Wolcott." He was dea. of the chh. from 1805 to 1845, and from 1822 to 1837 performed the duties or supplied the place of pastor to the chh., distinguishing himself in conferences and public meetings; rep. in leg. 5 years in succession, 1811 to 1815; and in society, chh. and town one of the most active and highly esteemed men that ever lived in W.; sometimes holding 18 or 20 offices and never less than 12; justice of the peace 8 years; surveyor of land so long that he knew at once where to go to commence tracing any line in the town. A. Bronson Alcott says: "No man ever lived in W. with such natural gifts as he, and had he received a liberal education he would have equaled any of the great men this state has produced." "He impressed every one with his deep sincerity and nearness to God." Several specimens of his composition, both prose and verse, are given in Mr. Orcutt's Hist. of Wolcott. [See p. 287 to 297.] Near the close of his life he seemed determined to destroy his writings and unfortunately succeeded, excepting his journal and eight or ten other fragments, which his daughter, Mrs. Bartholomew, succeeded in pulling out of the fire while they were burning in the doorway where he had made a bonfire of them. The death of his eldest son Isaac, Oct. 13, 1802, at the age of 18, was a terrible blow to him, and in his journal of that date he gives a touching expression of his sorrow, and describes him as "my Isaac, the son in whom I greatly delighted;" always faithful, dutiful and obedient; apt to learn; delighted with reading; a retentive memory; reflecting; penetrating in judgment; scrupulously truthful at all times, modest, sober and temperate in all things. Some verses written by the father on visiting the grave of his son, soon after the burial, and on the morning after a violent storm, are given in Hist. of Wolcott, p. 291-2, from which the following are copied:

"When solemn darkness veils the midnight skies,
And the huge tempest bellows o'er the plain,
Here in the dust, my once loved Isaac lies,
Nor heeds the howling winds, nor drenching rain."

"Oh! my fond heart, resign parental joys,
Nor hope to see him 'till the final hour,
Since naught can move him but Jehovah's voice;
Wait the sure efforts of Almighty power."

"The most unpromising officer that left Camp Dutton with the old Nineteenth was First Lieutenant Augustus H. Fenn. He was but eighteen years old, of freckled face and awkward gait, and was regarded with surly contempt by windy and consequential brother officers. Every private, soldier too, had his fling at him. It was considered very impudent in him to be an officer, at all; but he had recruited his forty men and there he was with a commission in his pocket from Governor Buckingham. There was no getting away from him, and he was assigned to company K, which was a kind of regimental Botany Bay. (That company had been formed by transfer of what the captains of the other nine companies considered their refuse; but it was, nevertheless, one of the best, most faithful, truest companies that ever went into the service). But three years of fighting blew away a good deal of showy incompetency and revealed true merit wherever it existed. Lieutenant Fenn grew in the estimation of his fellow officers and of all who knew him, until there was no tongue that dared to wag against him. He proved himself one of the best drill masters and disciplinarians in the regiment, and one of the most competent officers in every position. Before going to the front he was made captain of company C. On the 22d of June he led his company into the skirmish at Petersburg as far as it advanced, and was then and there detailed A. A. A. general on Upton's staff, vice Captain Sanborn of the Fifth Maine; and, mounting a horse which had been brought to him, commenced his duties at once. When the regiment left the Sixth Corps at Tennytown in July he was relieved. In September he was appointed judge advocate of the division court martial, which tried twenty-five cases. At Cedar Creek he lost his left arm. The surgeons at Annapolis proposed to muster him out and discharge him for disability, but he protested, and wrote to General Mackenzie, urging his interference; the consequence was that he was retained, and in less than seven weeks from the time he had an arm taken off at the shoulder he reported for full duty at the front, and was at once detailed as A. A. A. general of the brigade again, which detail was afterward changed to brigade inspector. He subsequently participated in several fights. He was detailed as judge advocate five different times; was brevetted major after Cedar Creek; promoted to major in January, 1865; brevetted lieutenant colonel for Little Sailor's Creek, and colonel for 'services during the war.' He is now practicing law at Waterbury, Connecticut. Truly, in his case, the last became one of the first"—Major T. F. Vail. He m. 13641. Isaiah Tuttle, b. May 25, 1753; built the first house in the n. e. cor. of Torrington, and in 1803 built a new house near the first, in one or other of which his descendants for several generations were born and lived. He kept tavern in both houses. After planting his orchard, he burned the field over, first turning down the trees and covering them with earth. This orchard is still standing. In his early days, that part of the country was a wilderness, and fires were necessary to keep away bears and wolves. "The old Major," as he was called, was considered a very remarkable man, and his sayings and doings are often quoted in that region. It is remembered that he used to back his grain four miles to mill. He was one of a trio who first voted the Democratic ticket in the town of Tor., and on one occasion at a public meeting they were asked by members of the opposing party to stand up that they might be seen. The character of the Major was little understood by his opponents if they thought he was ashamed of his opinions, or lacked courage to avow and defend them. Hon. John Boyd, in his Hist. of Winchester, says: "A hardy race were these South st. pioneers, from Still River bridge down to Isaiah Tuttle's, who sifted their corn meal for hasty pudding through a ladder. The Major remarked that by working bare footed in the stubble fields, that their heels became so hard that if they happened to tread on the feet of their cattle it would make them bellow. Apropos of the Major," continues Boyd, "the horse tamer who could ride anything but chain lightning. He had in a lot with other cattle, a ten year old bull which he ordered his s. and hired man to drive out and put elsewhere; they went in, and, after chasing the animal a long time around the field, they gave it up, and reported to the Major that they could not get him out. He said he was very sorry he had a s. and hired man who could not get a bull out of a lot; he would try what he could do with the 'critter.' He provided himself with a dish of salt, and, on his way to the lot, cut two stout clubs; letting down the bars he approached the cows with the salt; as the bull came up to get his share, the Major, watching for an opportunity, suddenly sprang on his back; away went the startled bull, scared and bellowing hideously, and as he sped over the ground, his rider, by blows of the clubs on one side or the other of his head, as he desired him to veer this way or that, guided him across the field and through the bars out into the highway under full sail. This," says Dr. Boyd, "somewhat indicates the spirit and energy of the Major and also of his descendants. They were prompt, energetic, spirited and courageous; and the end is not yet. With his boys he was felling timber on top of the same ridge of mountains. They felled a tall tree so that one-third of its length extended over a precipice some 20 or 30 feet. The Major ordered his eldest boy to go out on the trunk and cut away the top. Uriel went out, and, after striking a few blows, came back with a swimming head. Daniel was sent out to finish the job, but soon came back equally dizzy. After blazing away, in his characteristic manner, at his boys for their want of pluck, the Major took up his axe, and went out himself, and chopped away until the top of the tree unexpectedly yielded. His feet were one on each side of the chopping, and as the one on the top section of the tree yielded he lost his presence of mind, and, instead of grasping the main body, threw his arms around the falling section and went down with it. The boys hastening round the precipice came down to the landing place and found the Major bruised and wounded, but on his feet, wiping away with green leaves the blood that was flowing into his eyes and mouth from a wound in his forehead. 'Father,' said one of the boys, 'you've had a terrible fall.' 'Yes! Yes!' said the Major, 'a terrible fall. Adam's fall was nothing to it.'" He m. March 22, 1774, Ruth, dau. of Capt. IV. Uriel, b. Oct. 13, 1779; rep. Tor. in Conn. Leg. May, 1815 and 1828; Gen'l of mil. Gen. Chas. J. Sedgwick, historian, of Sharon, Conn., who served as aid on the staff of Gen. Tuttle, in a letter to the Comp., says: "He was a man of remarkably fine personal appearance, a splendid rider and particularly fond of fine horses. His influence was large in the town and county, and considerably so throughout the northern part of the state." In the Torrington centennial, by Rev. Samuel J. Mills, Gen. Tuttle is spoken of as having placed (1831) an organ in the chh., for which thanks were voted by the society (1835). He d. April 4, 1849. The following is from a communication from Dea. Thomas A. Miller to "Brother Burleigh," and printed in the "Republican" newspaper: "Died, on the 4th of this month, of an affection of the heart with which he had been troubled a number of years. He dropped dead in his barn in the morning. His virtues were numerous, his philanthropy enlarged, which only those who knew him best could appreciate. Eye quick to perceive, heart to feel, and hand to relieve the wants and woes of his fellow men; ready to enlist in any effort for the amelioration of suffering humanity. With an indomitable energy, he would surmount and overcome the most formidable obstacles. He was one of the first to enlist in the temperance cause, and threw himself into that reform when there was nothing to gain but obloquy and reproach. He ever remained firm and undaunted in this cause. Only a few hours before he was struck down he was engaged in devising plans for its advancement. His efforts and untiring zeal in the cause of emancipation are too well known to the public in this state to need a delineation. For many years and until his death he was President of the Litchfield Co. Anti-slavery Society, and, if I am not mistaken, was at the time of his death, President of the Connecticut State Anti-Slavery Society. His house was a refuge for the fugitive, and his purse and team were often employed to help him forward to a place of safety. No man watched with more interest the advance of his cause in this and other lands. His funeral was attended on the 6th by an immense concourse, who came from neighboring towns to testify respect and cast the last look upon that countenance which had so often led and cheered them on in the various works of philanthropy. *Your afflicted brother, T. June, 1835, Josiah Whipple Jenkins of Barre, Mass.; cons. of Timothy; set. in Vernon 1829; lawyer; eminent and successful; fond of rural pursuits, public spirited, adorned his farm and planted long rows of shade trees in the public streets of Vernon. These now lofty and full grown, living and beautiful memorials, better and more enduring monuments than the granite that marks his last resting place. He d. of typhoid fever Oct., 1852; a. 47 yrs. 1, DAVID TUTTLE, b. May 4, 1836; studious, considerate, mature in judgment, and so helpful to his mother, that he seemed to fill his f.'s place in the fam. Grad. Polytechnic Inst. at Troy, N. Y.; stud. law and began practice. The war breaking out "he did not leave home," writes his mother, "until the second yr., as my second s. went at the first call, and David was so necessary to the fam. that I felt I could not spare him. But the following year when the armies became decimated, and the President called for 'three hundred thousand more,' and the military committee of the county decided to raise another regiment, David, by their recommendation was appointed Adjutant. In the work of organizing the regiment (146 N. Y. vols.) he was indefatigable, and received his commission as Major. Col. Gerrard, then recently in command at West Point, was its first Colonel. On the arrival of the regt. at Albany, David was commissioned Lieut.-Col. by the Gov. on the recommendation of Col. Gerrard. The regt. remained one month in camp at Arlington Heights; then ordered to the front and taking part in the battle of Fredericksburg, only three mos. from its organization. Subsequently engaged in all the battles of the 'Army of the Potomac,' it earned the title by which it was everywhere known, of 'the fighting regt.' At the battle of Gettysburg Col. Jenkins, commanded the regt., Col. Gerrard commanding the brigade. Soon after that great battle David was commissioned Col. and a few months before he died he commanded the brigade, and his name had been forwarded for a com. as Brig.-Gen. He was in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Rappahannock Station, Bristol Station, Mine Run, Williamsport, Washington Heights, and lastly in the dreadful carnage of the Wilderness where he fell, bravely charging the enemies batteries." From the Washington National Intelligencer: "Killed in the battle of the Wilderness, May 5, 1864, Col. David T. Jenkins of Vernon, Oneida Co., N. Y. Alas! how much of the great history of disappointed hopes, worthy ambition, tender affection, deep sorrow and unspeakable grief, may be compressed in the record of a single sentence. In the loss of Col. Jenkins one more offering has been sacrificed on the costly altar of patriotism, a career of bright young promise closed, a sphere of active usefulness terminated, a source of influence in the community where he had been known from childhood and had grown into a respected manhood cut off, and a home bereaved of one in whom all the domestic affections were strong deep and fervent. He was a young man of more than ordinary worth, of more than average ability of culture, of solid qualities and of commanding influence; and it is due alike to the living and the dead, that such should be honored in a grateful remembrance." The Utica Herald, in speaking of our losses in that battle says: "In that conflict we lost Col. David T. Jenkins, than whom a braver or more meritorious officer never lived. He was accounted one of the best engineers in the Army of the Potomac, who were not West Point graduates. He was unacquainted with the science of arms when he entered upon his military career, but industrious study, added to a clear, ready and comprehensive mind, made him the superior of most of the volunteer officers of similar rank. He was rigid as a disciplinarian, but the testimony in the army is that he was a most excellent officer. He participated, always bravely, in the great battles of Fredricksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, and now leaves behind him an undying record. He was one of the best surveyors in the county, and previous to joining the army, had entered on a promising practice as a lawyer." Extract from the Utica Observer: "His (Col. Jenkins) ability, integrity and unassuming worth, caused him to be held in the highest estimation wherever he was known, and he was considered one of the most promising young men in the county." I might copy long pages from obituary notices regarding him in our county papers, but the above will show the estimation in which he was held, and I will now finish the record of the rest of the desc. of my f.—*Mrs. Flora J. 137528. Timothy John Dawson, b. Aug. 13, 1788; d. Cazenovia, N. Y., March 2, 1843; a most excellent man; enjoying the esteem and love of the community in which he lived in a very high degree; perfectly honest and truthful, with his father's peculiar tendency to humor, and an almost womanly gentleness and tenderness, traceable perhaps to his mother. He was somewhat above the medium stature and poss. a fair degree of physical vigor. He m. in W., Conn., Feb. 8, 1813, Ruhamah Roberts, b. Oct. 22, 1792; rem. to Canton, Conn., thence, in 1815, to Cazenovia, and in 1822 to Nelson Village whr. he kept public house many yrs.; again to Caze., 1838, and kept pub. house thr. Very fond of company and noted for hospitality and practical benevolence. After the war of 1812 the country was overrun by poor wayfarers, beggared by the evil fortunes of the times. Many of these found his door open. He nursed the sick, kept the footsore till they were healed, helped the destitute to clothing or shoes, and assisted them to find employment or self-help. He was supported in all this by his wise and frugal helpmeet, never weary in well doing. Fond of pets, he had the art of making every helpless and dependent creature love him. Flocks of birds came daily every summer to be fed by his hand. Charitable in judgment, he allowed no censoriousness or gossip among his children. "If you have nothing good to say don't say anything." He had a store of humor and amusing anecdote, and was usually very cheerful, yet suffered sometimes from extreme depression, but the shadows were short lived and the sun soon shone again. He had a strong affection for his kindred. A remote, common ancestry or identity of family name endeared persons to him as if life-long friends and he never forgot them. A true friend. A genial companion. His word was law in his family, yet so loving and indulgent, that no one wished it otherwise. "His life was gentle and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man."

Retiring from the practice of law, banking was his principal business until 1868, when he became Pres. of the Scoville Manuf. Co., to which he has since devoted a large part of his time. He has taken an active part in the public improvements of the town, and his name has been brought forward in connection with some of the highest offices in the state, but he has no inclination for political life, and seeks relaxation from business in literary occupation; and in local public affairs. II. Julius Jesse Bronson Kingbury, b. Oct. 18, 1797; stud. with Rev. Dr. Bennett Tyler, then of So. Britain, Conn., Rev. Mr. Hart of Plymouth, and Rev. Daniel Parker of Ellsworth, Conn. In 1819, through influence of Hon. David Daggett, then U. S. Sen., was app. Cadet at West Pt. Mil. Acad. whr. he grad. and was attached as 2d Lieut. to 2d Reg. Inf.; ordered with a detachment of troops to Sault de St. Marie, at the outlet of Lake Superior, to assist in building Fort Brady. Here he remained three or four years under Major (Col.) Cutler, during which time (while on leave of absence to the East) he m. Jane C. Stebbins, sis.-in-law of Capt. W. Becker, also of the 2d Regt. He was next ordered with a detachment by sea to New Orleans and Nacogdoches. Afterward stationed for a time at Mackenaw and Fort Gratiot. During the Black Hawk war in 1832 he was at Chicago, attached to the Commissary Depart. and saw much hard and dangerous service. While there he bought for seven hundred dollars about thirty-six acres of land on the north east branch of the Chicago River near its junction with the south branch; also about two acres on the south side of the main river; the latter tract in the heart of the present city, and the former but a little way distant. The land, after much litigation, is still in possession of the fam. and of great value. When the purchase was made in 1832 Chicago contained but five small stores and two hundred and fifty inhabitants. The present "Kingsbury Square" was named for him. He was afterward at Fort Niagara; later, during the disturbance on our north eastern frontier, he was stationed at Hancock Barracks, Houlton, Me., thence to Tampa Bay, Fla., (Seminole war) where he remained three yrs., (excepting a short interval), and his constitution was so broken by the climate, exposure and fatigue that he never recovered. On his return to the north he was stationed at Sackett's Harbor and afterward a second time at Fort Brady. Thence, early in 1847, to join Gen. Scott by Vera Cruz, assisting in the capture of that place, and more or less engaged in all the battles on the march to the city of Mexico. For good conduct in one of these engagements he was breveted. Throughout the campaign he acted as Lieut. Col. of his regt., though by rank only a Capt. While convalescing from a severe attack of brain fev., Gen. Scott sent him home on sick leave. In Dec., 1848, ordered with a part of his regt. to California, where he remained two yrs.; while there was promoted, and transferred to 6th Regt. In 1850 he returned home, too much out of health for duty, and spent the next two yrs. at Washington and at the East on sick leave. Then, on his way to St. Louis, was detained at Detroit by sickness, where he spent the winter of 1852-3. While there, owing to some misunderstanding with the War Dept., not impeaching his integrity or honor, his name was stricken from the army roll. Considering himself unfairly treated he declined to make any explanation or hold any communication with the Dept. Before he died, however, he settled all his accounts with the Govt. and received a balance that was due him. He d. at Washington, when on the point of leaving for the East, of a malignant dysentery, July 23, 1856. According to his expressed wishes his remains were brought to Waterbury and buried in the old ground by the side of his father's. 1, WALTER. 2, HENRY W., b. Dec. 25, 1837; grad. *The mo. of Mrs. Goodrich was a dau. of Rev. Mr. Colton of W. Hartf. By her first m. to Mr. Allen she had Anne W. (Mrs. Goodrich) and John Allen, a distinguished lawyer of Litchfield and M. C., of whom tradition says that he silenced Albert Gallatin by superiority of argument and eloquence. Mrs. Allen m. (a) Dea. David Austin of New Haven, and Gen. Burgoyne, while a prisoner at-large, boarded with her several weeks, perhaps months. Mrs. G., then a small girl, used to read newspapers to him, and once sitting in his lap read a paragraph in which he was spoken of as "John Burgoyne," at which he manifested so much indignation as to frighten the little girl.

†The session of Cong. was drawing to a close and it was not thought probable that the bill would be reached. Prof. Morse, who had despaired of its passage, was preparing to leave for New York. In the morning, Miss Annie Ellsworth, then a young school girl, called to congratulate him. Her father, then Com. of Patents, and an intimate friend of Prof. Morse, had watched the House till the last moment. She said: "Father sent me to tell you that your bill was passed. He remained until the session closed, and yours was the last bill but one acted upon, and it was passed just five minutes before the adjournment; and I am so glad to be the first one to tell you. Mother says, too, that you must come home with me to breakfast." The grateful Prof. thanked her again and again, and assured her that she should send over the wires the first message as her reward. The matter was talked over in the family and Mrs. Ellsworth suggested the message which Prof. Morse referred to her daughter, and this was the one subsequently sent when the line between Wash. and Balt. was completed, Albert Vail, his asst., being at the Mount Clare Depot in Balt. and Prof. Morse in the Chamber of the Supreme Court in Wash., and the circuit being found perfect, Prof. M. sent to Annie for her message, and it came: "What hath God wrought!"—the first message ever transmitted by a recording telegraph. The story has been often told with many exaggerations, and has roamed about Europe with much romantic material attached to it, but the above is the simple, true statement.

After m. and rem. to Ridgefield, a great change occurred in the fortunes of her f. and expectations from that source were cut off; but she zealously devoted herself to her duties and was a pattern of conjugal co-operation and fidelity. She was a great lover of the beautiful in nature and often might be seen at the close of day retired and alone in contemplation. The lines of Pollock appropriately describe the scenes she loved and the temper of her mind:

"The moon awoke, and from her maiden face
Shedding her cloudy locks, looked meekly forth
And with her virgin stars walked in the heavens;
Walked nightly, though conversing as she walked,
Of purity and holiness and God."

†It is written of the poet. Percival, that after his grad. at Y. C., then a young man about 20, he returned home to Kensington (Berlin), "but found few who could respond to his own poetical and cultivated mind, yet there was one, the dau. of the Berlin pastor and the sister of the late Peter Parley, whose beauty of person, elegant manners and refined tastes made her an attractive companion." At the parsonage he was always a welcome visitor, and with this young lady he "botanized in the fields and poetized in the library." It was with her that he found his most congenial society; and it is her name which occurs most frequently in the poems he now wrote. The following is a specimen of the breathings of his passion:—

'The morn is blinking o'er the hills,
With softened light and colors gay;
Through grove and valley sweetly thrills
The melody of early day.

The dewy roses, blooming fair,
Glitter around her father's ha',
But still my Mary is not there—
The fairest rose is far awa'!

This was perhaps the most charming acquaintance that Percival ever had with any lady. Both were young and free from care. In the dewy freshness of emotion there was a delicate and tremulous enjoyment, which inspired the poet's verses; and this lady, like the Highland beauty of Burns, will ever live in the ideal passion of Percival's verse. But this never became an affair of the heart. The young lady was already engaged to another, and gave to Percival only the affection and sympathy of a familiar friend.—J. H. Ward's Life and Letters of J. G. Percival, p. 42-43.

V. Charity, Dec. 19, 1760; living, in good health, in 1856, a. 95; m. Dec. 31, 1736, Elisha Hawley of Ridgefield, Conn., b. March 14, 1759; d. April, 1850, a. 91; (s. of Thomas, jr., and g. s. of Rev. Thomas Hawley, the 1st pastor of R.) At the age of 18 was drafted and sent to N. Y.; his reg. was stationed at Corlear's Hook, from which the retreat was so hasty that the soldiers threw away their blankets and knapsacks; Elisha, however, retained his, and his Col. was glad to share with him during the stormy night which followed. Soon after his m. he and his wf. joined the Presb. chh. in R., and was afterwards elected Dea., which office he held during life. He always had excellent health, and his vigor of body and mind continued to the last. During the last summer of his life, in his 91st yr., he would work nearly all day with his men in the field. At the age of 80 (1838) he made the 4th of July address at R., and closed with singing "Hail Columbia." He was for a time chorister. In all his business transactions his chief concern was lest he should charge his neighbor more than the article sold was really worth. He was by trade a cabinet maker. Abounding in good works, his name will long be fragrant among the people where his long life was spent. (An obituary was written by Rev. Mr. Clark.) "It is strange to see in this world a man who always, and under all circumstances, seems to have as his master motive the wish to do just right; yet such a man was Dea. Hawley. Of a peculiarly mild and amiable temper, his countenance wore a tranquil and smooth expression. His hair was fine and silky and lay as if oiled, close to his head. He had a soft voice and an ear for music. He was a cabinet maker by trade, a chorister by choice, a deacon by vote of the church, and a Christian by the grace of God. In each of these things he found his place as if designed for it by nature and providence."—S. G. Goodrich in Recollections of a Life Time, vol. I, p. 225. 1, ELISHA. 2, JUDSON, merch. in N. Y. "Oh! ye who mourn
With heavy temples o'er the smitten son
Slain in his Saviour's service, know that pain
Shall never vex him more. Peril and change
And winter's blast and summer's sultry heat,
And sinful snare—What are they now to him
But dim remembered sounds?"

A few years before his death their celebrated s., Elihu, writes in his journal: "I have recently visited the burying ground where sleep the patriarchs of my native village, and a large congregation of their children. I made my way among the simple monuments till I paused, thoughtfully, prayerfully, meekly near one erected to the memory of Elihu Burritt, who d. Jan., 1827, a. 63. It seemed as if I had come suddenly before a mirror and seen a departed face there. It was the same name my own stone will bear—if ever one be erected to my memory—but what age shall it record? In what land shall it be raised? On the same stone was engraved the name of Elizabeth Burritt, our godly, beloved mother, who, to all her children, both on earth and in heaven, was the most precious friend this side of Jesus Christ." At another time he refers to her as "my godly mother, whose prayers seem at times to surround me like a whispering atmosphere."

VIII. Elihu Burritt, b. Dec. 8, 1810; his early advantages of education limited to the common school and a small library of the village. An anecdote of his school days shows the benevolence of his character. The habit of whispering to each other in school hours had grown up among the scholars. To check this the teacher adopted a plan of placing a ferule in the hands of the first delinquent, who was made to hold it until it was passed to the next offender and so on; the last holder being detained after dismissal of the rest and severely punished. One day about five minutes before dismissal, a large boy who held the ferule contrived to entrap Lucy W., the largest and best girl in the school, into an act of whispering and so she became the holder, and would have been punished had not Elihu, whose sympathies were aroused in view of the impending crisis, drew the punishment upon himself, and became the scape goat for all the sinners of that day. A severe correction was administered to him by the teacher, but he bore it joyfully as it saved another from ill-merited pain and disgrace. He was very modest and his diffidence so great, that rather than meet the company at the marriage of his sister, he ran away, and being missed, was found after much search hid behind a barrel in the cellar. This diffidence attended him through life and was only overcome when some duty or principle was involved, and then he became as bold as a lion.

His father dying when Elihu was 18 yrs. of a., he apprenticed himself to a blacksmith and learned the trade thoroughly. Having an immense thirst for learning he devoted his spare time to reading and study. At the age of 21 he entered his bro.'s school and gave especial attention to mathematics, with the object of becoming a surveyor. He made rapid progress, but after one term in the school he found it necessary to return to the anvil. Every spare moment of his working hours were given to study, and seeing that the languages could be acquired under such circumstances with greater facility than mathematics, he procured a small Greek grammar, which he carried in his hat, and resorted to at every opportunity. Mornings and evenings were given to Latin and French. After a short period of work, he was able to devote another term exclusively to study, and went to New Haven for the advantages of proximity to Yale Col., but being ashamed at his age to ask for help in the elementary studies, he determined to learn Greek and Hebrew without aid. He began with Homer's Iliad and a Greek Lexicon with Latin definitions, and his success was such that he learned not only these languages, but also the benefit of self-reliance and the power of will and application. During this winter in New Haven he made rapid progress in the languages ancient and modern. The next year he taught an academy in a neighboring town, but his health beginning to suffer from confinement, he became a traveling salesman for a manufacturing concern; then bought an interest in a country store, where the financial reversion of 1837 found him, and swept away all his savings.

A new departure being necessary he walked to Boston, about 125 miles, hoping to find work and opportunity to study, but failed and retraced his steps to Worcester, where he found both, and gained admittance to the large and rare library of the Antiquarian Society, where he spent his evenings and leisure hours. Here he found a Cello-Breton dictionary and grammar, and was soon able to address a letter in this language—dated Aug. 12, 1838, the first and only one ever written in this country—to the "Royal Antiquarian Society of France." In return he received a commendatory letter of acknowledgment, and a very large vol. bearing the seal of the society. Having become more or less familiar with all the languages of Europe and several of Asia, he desired to turn his knowledge to practical account, and with this view wrote a letter to Hon.

Edward Everett. Out of this grew an offer from Mr. Everett of a free course at Harvard Col., which he was compelled to decline for the reason that manual labor in connection with study was indispensable to his health.

About this time he began to be known as "The Learned Blacksmith," and in 1841 to lecture by invitation before Lyceums and Associations in different parts of the country. His first lecture entitled "Application and Genius," was delivered sixty times during the first winter. Among the first at New Haven (in a hall on Church street, then used as a Congregational church, and now known as the "American Theatre,") before the "Young Mens' Institute," of which the compiler was a member, and distinctly remembers the lecture and the lecturer. His argument was that there is no such thing as genius, and that success is the result of patient and persevering application; and the impression made at the time still remains that he embodied in himself and illustrated in his history a partial refutation of his own theory. Between the words Application and Genius, use the plus sign.

As mere scholarship, learning or the acquisition of knowledge can never satisfy the soul of an earnest man while so much suffering exists that can be alleviated by human effort, he soon turned his attention to philanthropic labors. One of the first objects to engage his attention was the Peace Cause. "Peace on Earth and good will among men." To this he added the advocacy of freedom, temperance, self culture, cheap postage and other reforms, and in furtherance of these objects, established or edited several public journals, lectured, wrote letters, tracts, and newspaper articles, and devoted himself as wholly to human progress as he had done before to learning.

In 1846 he went to England in the same ship that carried the news of the friendly settlement of the Oregon Question. Here he remained three years working for the Peace Cause, traveling, lecturing, writing, circulating "Olive Leaves," organizing "Peace Congresses" in London, Manchester, Brussels, Frankfort and Paris. In 1847, the year of the great famine, he visited Ireland and spent two weeks in going from hut to hovel, and was so greatly distressed by what he saw, that he made a strong and earnest appeal to his native State for aid, which did much to intensify the sympathies of the benevolent, and resulted in sending a ship load of provisions from Boston to Cork, which were received with joyful demonstrations.

While in Europe he had observed that the high rates of international postage were very burdensome to the poorer classes; and on his return to America in 1849 he went to work with his accustomed zeal and energy to bring about a reform; by lectures, letters, tracts, newspapers, petitions and visits to Congressmen and high officials. To him more than to any other are the people indebted for the present increased facilities for international correspondence.

On his return in 1855 from a second visit to Europe, he observed the increased bitterness between the North and the South, on the subject of slavery, and was extremely anxious to avoid a rupture. His plan was a compensated emancipation, the money to be raised by the sale of the public lands. He believed it feasible, and labored as usual to bring it about. But it was too late. When war became inevitable he retired to New Britain to the home of a beloved sister and two nieces.

In 1863 he returned to England to fulfill one of the purposes of his first visit, namely, a pedestrian tour to gain an insight into the condition of the working classes. In 1863 and 1864 he walked from London to John O'Groat's, and from London to Land's End, and published the results of his observations in two separate vols.

In 1865 he was appointed Consular Agent for Birmingham, Eng., and, as such, visited various manufacturing establishments and collected information concerning the industries and productions of the territory included in his consulate. This was published in a large vol. of 414 pages, abounding in valuable information, and withal, a very readable and entertaining book. Copies were sent to the State Dept. at Washington, and in return, Mr. Seward sent a highly complimentary letter to the author. While at Birmingham he also wrote The Mission of Great Sufferings, 250 pp. He also continued his correspondence with the London Peace Society and wrote articles for various papers, designed to interest, instruct and benefit the young. "His whole soul seemed to be fired with a desire to do those things which would tend to mitigate suffering and bless mankind. No man ever lived whose efforts seemed more unselfish or philanthropic in their character and tendency than those of Elihu Burritt." On resuming his studies at Birmingham he found that six different alphabets, and many words and phrases of other languages had escaped his memory, but they were regained with but little effort. He returned to America for the last time in 1870 and resumed his residence at New Britain with his sister and two nieces, the latter having presided over his household during the four years of his residence in Birmingham. He had managed to save enough out of his consulate to pay the debt incurred in purchasing his farm. It was a poverty-stricken tract, all covered with stones when he bought it, but with much toil he improved it greatly. Here he wrote Thoughts at the Plow, and most of the "inside articles" in his paper, North and South, were written on a barrel-head in his barn. "The prospect from my hill," he says, "is magnificent, and I enjoy it more and more."

In 1874 he made arrangements to go to England to work up a grand international "Peace Congress," but while on the way to Quebec to embark, a serious illness compelled him to abandon the undertaking and return home. Afterward his labors were limited to his native city and its neighborhood. He established three or four weekly meetings in as many different parts of the town, for the benefit of those who lived at an inconvenient distance from the established churches; and paid all the incidental expenses out of his own scanty resources. In one section of the town he erected a building to accommodate 300 persons, doing nearly all the work with his own hands. He was deeply interested in the public schools, and as a member of the local Board of Education, frequently visited them and addressed the pupils; always a most welcome visitor. So in every good work he continued active as long as his strength was sufficient for it.

In the Autumn of 1878 he fully realized that his release was near. Less than a week before he died he said to some fellow-members of a club who called to give him the parting hand, "I hardly know whether to say good evening or good-bye." He was a sincere Christian, and was ready for the summons to go up higher. He d. March 6, 1879, a. 69.

Prof. Longfellow says: "I always had a great admiration for the sweetness and simplicity of his character, and was in perfect sympathy with him in his work." * * * Nothing ever came from his pen that was not wholesome and good." Mary Howitt writes of his "stupendous knowledge of the languages," his "prodigious learning," his "large and benevolent heart, every throb a sentiment of brotherhood to all mankind." Of the languages to which he gave special attention were Amharic, Arabic, Basque, Bohemian, Celtio-Breton, Chaldaic, Cornish, Dutch, Ethiopic, Flemish, French, Gaelic, German, Greek, Hebrew, Hindostani, Hungarian, Icelandic, Irish, Latin, Manx, Persian, Polish, Portuguese, Russian, Samaritan, Sanscrit, Spanish, Swedish, Syriac, Turkish and Welsh. *Thomas Powell may be the same who in May, 1664, was of Long Island; admitted to be sworn freeman of Conn. by commissioners of Huntington. He was dissatisfied probably with the recusancy of that colony to the union with Conn. as by royal charter provided, and may have been at Springfield, 1665. At least bought land there but did not continue long, but went back to New Haven, but not to be on the list there of 1669. He d. in New Haven 1681. His dau. Priscilla m. Thomas Powell conv. to his son Thomas Tuttle July 11, 1681, one acre of land in the Yorkshire Quarter bounded by Samuel Newman's on one side, by the fortifications at one end and by Jeremiah Hull's land at the other end. His will dated Sept. 29, 1681, appointing "well beloved son-in-law Thomas Tuttle sole exr.", and names grandchildren John Tuttle to have six acres of meadow land; also house, lands and home lot, except a part to gr. chil. Hannah Tuttle, Joshua, Martha, Abigail, Mary and Esther, and one acre to Caleb Tuttle — N. H. Rec. A Thomas Powell was made freeman of the Stationers' Co., London, July 21, 1556. — Hansard's Typographia.

on account of gout 1689; about 1690 conv. to s. Caleb the lot that was bro. David's in Yorkshire Quarter. In 1701 conv. to s. John "right in the Wigglesworth lot (north side of chapel between High and York sts.) for which I paid £15 to my son-in-law Joshua Hotchkiss." Jan. 7, 1700, conv. to s. John Tuttle "my right in the home lot," Joshua Hotchkiss, John Ball and Eliphalet Ball wits. In 1695 conv. land to John Blakeslee. In 1707 admr. of Mr. Wm. Tuttle's, remainder granted to his s. Thomas, and inv. of lands exhibited. In June, 1689, with Capt. Moses Mansfield, took inv. and appraisal of est. of James Davids (Col. John Dixwell). £276, 12s. 6d. Prest. Stiles says: "Thomas Tuttle, I have been told, assisted in laying out Mr. Dixwell, and there is some reason to believe he was the very person that privately dug Whalley's grave and assisted at his interment here."—History of the Judges; see app. He lived and d. on what is now a part of the College Square. The lot was assigned to Mrs. Constable in 1639. It fronted on Market Place (upper Green) about 170 feet, and extended back about half the square, between College and York, or nearly to High st. It contained about 1.5-8 acres. In 1652 Mrs. Constable sold the lot to Thomas Wheeler who sold it in 1657 to Thomas Tuttle; the lot adjoined that of his father on the south. The two lots occupied half the front on College st., between Chapel and Elm, and comprised the larger proportion of the south half of the parallelogram, now called "College Square." On these Tuttle homesteads the most ancient of the college buildings were afterwards erected. The old "Observatory" stands on about the center of the Thomas Tuttle lot, whose northern boundary line produced across the upper Green, passes through the middle of the "Old State House," the Dixwell monument and the Center church. It is in fact coincident with the meridian line of the original nine squares of the town plot, and its intersection with a line parallel to and a little west of Temple st. is the exact central point of John Brockett's lay out. That point is in the porch or the vestibule of the Center chh. Thomas Tuttle by deed dated May 13, 1710—about 5 mos. before his dec.—conv. the homestead to youngest s. Joshua, who 40 yrs after, 1750, conv. to the College a narrow strip on the south side, 20 feet wide by 250 feet deep (to make room for the south middle college) excepting a strip one foot wide on which a part of the house stood. This determines the location of the dwelling very closely. Excepting this strip, the property was held by Thomas Tuttle and his descendants for a period of 133 yrs.; previously held by Mrs. Constable 13 yrs. (1639-1652), Thomas Wheeler 5 yrs. (1652-1657), Thomas Tuttle and desc. 123 yrs. (1657-1780), John Scott 16 yrs. (1780-1796), whose executors sold it to the College; whose period of possession, 86 yrs., (1796-1882), falls short more than one-third century of that of the Tuttle family; but they will catch up in 1920, unless they sell out and remove to Hartford in the mean time. About 1750 in a conv. of right of wid. of Joshua Tuttle the lot is described as bounded on the north in part by land of Benjamin Franklin, Esq., of Philadelphia. Thos. Tuttle d. Oct. 19, 1710; will dated May 6, 1704; proved 2d Tuesday of Nov., 1710; "son Joshua exr.; s. Caleb to have a set of coopering tools; gr. chil. He said "he never went to school but one day in his life and then the school didn't keep, it being Saturday. A great stutterer, eccentric and quick at repartee, a large number of his sayings are treasured up among the people of the town. When quite young he tried his hand at impromptu poetry. Repairing or renewing the meeting house was the matter and as usual the public mind was greatly disturbed. Mr. Swift, the pastor, tried in vain to calm the troubled waters. At a meeting called for the purpose of discussion, Mr. Swift called on Mr. Hotchkiss for his opinion. It was several minutes before he could speak a word, but finally said: "We've got an old church without a steeple, a good pastor and a quarrelsome people. Them is my views." This speech had a good effect. On a later occasion it was moved by the deacons that we settle Mr. — pastor over this church, which provoked some discussion, when Mr. H. moved "an important amendment—that this—this minister be set—settled on—on—on horse—back." Coming from New Haven on a lumber wagon one dark night, he was stopped on the road by two highwaymen, one seizing the horse, the other saying: "Give us your money or I'll knock h—l out of you in two minutes." He replied, "All the money I had with me I left at the toll-gate, and if you think I have h—l in me you may knock it out." This cool though stammering reply disarmed the robbers who let him go on without further molestation. He was a cooper by trade and at one time conducted an extensive business. "He d. 341. Mary Tuttle, b. May 6, 1693; d. Sept. 23, 1771, a. 79; m. June 16, 1716, John Ball, jr., b. Sept. 30, 1685. W. L. Stone, in his Reminiscences of Ballston and Saratoga, says that John Ball of New Haven, father of the Rev. Eliphalet, was a second cousin of Mary Ball, the mother of George Washington. This is also stated among the descendants, who possess, it is said, proofs of the fact. They lived on what is now the College Square. The lot fronts on Chapel st. and extends from the west line of the Wm. Tuttle lot, nearly to High st., and was of the same depth. It contained about an acre and a half, and with the Wm. Tuttle and Thomas Tuttle lots, it formed an exact square, comprising nearly one-half the present College Square, and exactly one-fourth of the square bounded by College, York, Chapel and Elms sts., one of the original nine. The Ball lot was first assigned to John Cockerill, who never occupied it. Then Thomas Fugill, the recording officer of the town, took it, and built a poorly constructed house and barn to rent. He left in 1646, under censure for making a false record for his own advantage. Alling Ball then took it on condition that the house should be put in good order by the town, which was done, and it became the Ball homestead and remained in that family one hundred and seventy years. From Alling Ball it passed to his s., Sergt. John, in 1710, and in 1722, to a son of the latter, Ensign John, who m. Mary Tuttle as above. Their son, Dea. Stephen Ball, succeeded to the property in 1732, and held it 68 yrs., to 1800, when his children succeeded, and they or their heirs sold it to the college in 1818. With the exception of a small strip next to the Wm. Tuttle lot, sold to the college in 1745, it had been in the Tuttle-Ball family 96 yrs. The present Art Museum and the Pierson (the first President) statue stands on the Ball homestead. John Ball d. Jan. 22, 1730, in his 46th yr., and in March, sm. yr., his wid., Mary, exhib. will dated Jan. 19, 1730, in which he calls himself John Ball, jr., and names sons John, Eliphalet, Timothy and Stephen, and daus., Mary and Hannah; inv., £1206 18s. 6d. (His father of the same name served as dea. of the first chh. 41 yrs. His bro., Rev. Ebenezer Punderson, Y. C. 1726, was the celebrated Episc. clergyman at Stratford, Conn.) In 1739, Dea. John Punderson, in right of his wf., Mary Ball, set off est. of John Ball, jr., as follows: wid., one-third; John, two-thirds of a farm in Westfield, etc.; Eliphalet, 5½ acres in Yorkshire Quarter, etc.; Timothy, 40 acres in the 5th division; Stephen, land in the Yorkshire Quarter, etc.; Mary Atwater had Salt Meadows, on island, near Neck Bridge; Hannah had personal property. Will of Mary Punderson, dated May 18, 1757, gives "all land descended from my father, Thomas Tuttle," to dau., Mary, wf. of Abm. Atwater, and dau., Hannah, wf. of Joseph Hitchcock. To Mary Atwater, my pewter tea pot, silver spoons, etc.; mns. sons, John, Eliphalet, Timothy, Stephen, sole execs.; John Prout, Isaac Doolittle and Richard Cutler, wit. In 1757 Timothy and John sell right in prop. of gr. f., John Ball. In 1779 John and Glover, sons of the late Mr. John Ball and gr. sons of Ens. John Ball, pet. the court for the div. of their gr. mo.'s dower to the 4 sons, viz.: John, Eliphalet, Timothy and Stephen. Roger Sherman, prov. 1793, his son Stephen Ball, and brother-in-law and kinsman Jeremiah Atwater, being the other two wit. He was a large land owner. His house (according to the map of 1748) stood on Chapel st., about where the Yale Col. Art building now stands. At the time of the British invasion of New Haven in 1779, he had in his charge the silver communion service of the First chh., some of the cups of which are very valuable from historical associations. How to save this silver? The wide, open chimneys of those days usually contained a shelf inside high enough to be beyond common reaching distance. Taking his little daughter Mary, then about 12 yrs. old, he lifted her into the chimney with the silver in her hands, which she deposited on the shelf. The soldiers rummaged everywhere for valuables, but failed to discover it; and so it was saved and is still in use. See vol. 1 N. H. Col. H. Soc. Collection, Art Inc. of N. H. 1779, by Prof. Goodrich, also Capt. Chas. H. Townsend's Cent. Hist. Dea. Ezra Tuttle,* a Meth. preacher, active, widely known and much respected in the region of his labors on L. I. When quite young Sylvester rem. to N. Y. C., and in time became the sole proprietor of a large hat, cap and fur store, the business of which he conducted so prudently that he was always able to pay 100 cts. on the dollar, and to withstand the financial pressure of 1837; there being but one house in the same trade in N. Y. besides his own that could do so. While in N. Y. he became interested with Mr. Chichester in the coal business in Williamsburg. The death of Mr. C. was the occasion of the relinquishment by Mr. T. of his N. Y. business and removal to Williamsburg, where he soon laid the foundation of the large fortune of which he died possessed. While in N. Y. he was a mem. of Forsyth st. Meth. Epis. chh., and on removal joined the So. Fifth st. M. E. chh. was an active mover and large contributor towards building "that pride of the Eastern District," St. John's M. E. chh., cor. of Bedford ave. and Wilson st. Among other objects of his pious labors he gave especial thought and care to the No. Third st. Mission School. In 1871 he made a tour of Europe in company with his wife and Dr. Albert Wright and wife. Dr. Wright published a series of articles in a Brooklyn newspaper, in which his traveling companions were pleasantly alluded to. During a sojourn at Rome Mr. T. was very near to death's door with fever, but rallied and returned home quite well. Every spring, however, he had symptoms of the same sickness. The last attack was unusually sudden and severe and resulted fatally, May 25, 1874.—Brooklyn Paper. 4, ZELOTES, b. June 25, 1825. 5, FRANCES REBECCA, b. March 28, 1832; m. June 3, 1857, Ezra B. Jan. 13, 1825; he d. at sea June 14, 1827, on board the sloop of war John Adams, of which he was first officer; buried at sea. A newspaper of Norfolk, Va., contained the following notice: "We take pleasure in recording the annexed tribute of respect to the memory of that excellent man and valuable officer, Lieut. John P. Tuttle of the navy. 'His soul has gone aloft.' It was our pleasure to be acquainted with Lieut. T., and we are enabled from our own observation, as well as from the testimony of many of his friends and shipmates to say that among its choicest spirits our navy does not boast a better officer or a better man. But a short time before leaving port on his last voyage he had the misfortune to be separated by death from the amiable partner of his bosom, who left him one child, an interesting little girl of two years, of whom he was dotingly fond. At a time when his early return was fondly looked for by his friends, the messenger of death arrived and summoned him to his final account. May the recollection of his virtues temper the poignancy of their grief at this afflictive event. At a meeting of the brother officers of the late Lieut. J. P. Tuttle, held on Monday evening in this borough, it was resolved, unanimously, that they deeply deplore the death of that officer, and that in testimony of his irreparable loss to his country and to themselves, they will wear a badge of mourning for 30 days." The Connecticut Herald, in a notice, says of him: "Since he received his warrant in 1814 he has been most constantly in active service. Versed in the principles of naval discipline, eminently acquainted with the human character, disdaining a base action, indefatigable in the performance of his duty, he commended himself to his superior officers. While, then, the navy is deprived of one of its brightest ornaments, an aged mother is bereaved of an affectionate son whose speedy return she had joyfully anticipated, and numerous relatives and friends of one whose candor, whose generosity, whose ardent and inevitable attachments they will always be proud to emulate." He married Margaretta, dau. of Commodore James Barron,* U. S. N., and had one child as above, who d. y.

Surrendering to that vessel he was boarded for deserters and several of the crew taken off. A court-martial resulted in the suspension of Com. Barron for five yrs. The course of Com. Decatur in this affair led to a duel between Barron and Decatur (1820) in which both were wounded, the latter mortally. Com. Barron died in 1851, a. 83, the senior officer of the navy. He had a high reputation for seamanship. Com. Samuel Barron, U. S. N., was his brother.

35. John Tuttle, b. Dec. 5, 1669; when 12 yrs. of age he became jointly with his sis. Hannah owner of the house and lot of his g. f., Thomas Powell, by devise. It included the Wigglesworth lot, and a small original allotment to Thomas Powell of abt.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of an acre adjoining it on the west. Edward Wigglesworth, the grantee and first owner, built a house on it and sold it in 1646 to Samuel Wilson, who sold it in 1647 to Thomas Powell. It adjoined the Ball lot on the east, the same in depth, and with the Powell lot, the Ball lot and the William Tuttle homestead, occupied the whole front of Chapel st. between College and York, excepting the large lot on the corner of Chapel and York sts., which belonged to Joshua Hotchkiss, who also owned the next lot to it on York st. Thomas Powell d. in 1681, and his will giving the homestead to his gr. chil., John and Hannah Tuttle, provides that John should have the whole if Hannah did not marry. Henry White, in his superb article on The Land Titles of Yale College, is partly mistaken in saying that "Hannah did not marry, and John became possessed of the whole." Hannah m. abt. 1686, Joshua Hotchkiss, and so made good her title. Her f., Thomas Tuttle, bought her right for the benefit of his s. John, as appears by a deed of conveyance to John in 1701 of "my rt. in the Wigglesworth lot, for which I paid £15 to my son-in-law, Joshua Hotchkiss," and about the same time he conv. to John his rt. in the Powell allotment, and so John became the owner of the whole. II. Ruth, b. Oct. 24, 1704; bap. March, 1735. "Ruth Tuttle (1736), dau. of John Tuttle, lately dec., of N. Hav., conv. to Warham Mather the Pine Rock Field." Same yr. she conv. to John Bassett land laid out to Thomas Powell. In 1737 she conv. to Moses Tuttle of N. Hav. "rt. in the house of my f., John Tuttle," and rt. in est. of sis. Hannah Tuttle, dec.; m. Jan. 18, 1737, Japhet Mansfield, jr. In 1741 adm. on his est. given to wid. Ruth. The will of Ruth Mansfield dated 1747, prov. Oct. 9, 1749, pres. by "Mr. Moses Tuttle of Bedford, in the county of Hampshire, province of Mass. Bay," who is named execr.; nms. hon. mo., sis., Lydia Mansfield, Dorothy Tuttle and bro. Moses; gives "to the Cong. chh. and soc. of N. Hav., which took benefit of the act of toleration, as a token of my love, and all my rt. in a certain peice of meadow lying in the East Meadow, so called, which was set off to me by the freeholders in the div. of my f.'s est., in fee simple; to bro. Moses a red checkered coverlet, a pair of sheets, a suit of curtains, a great chair, four new pewter plates, and also all my land in the Pine Rock Field." Her X mark. The dower of the wid. of Japhet Mansfield, jr., was distributed in 1762 to Mary Sperry, wf. of Elihu, Rachel Tuttle, wf. of Stephen, Esther Beach, Martha Sperry, Sarah Tuttle, wf. of Amos, and Comfort Nichols, sis. of Japhet Mansfield; Ruth calls Hannah Todd "sister."

He resigned in 1853. A successor describes him as a faithful and orthodox minister. "His ministry at G. was blessed with prosperity and peace." Subsequently he preached at Windsor, Conn., (Wapping parish), three years, and afterwards at Southold, L. I., where he d. Nov. 21, 1785. The Powell homestead, of which Moses became owner of the largest share by inheritance and purchase of his sisters rights is now very valuable. The Yale Art Building stands partly on it, and partly on the Ball lot. High st. runs through it, and the brown stone houses and two or three frame buildings beyond are within its limits. The subjoined abstracts of deeds in relation to this property are interesting, and will become more so as time rolls on. April 9, 1739, Hannah Tuttle (wid of John), Lydia and Dorothy Tuttle conv. to Caleb Hotchkiss, jr., (Caleb 3d) July 14, 1762; Moses Tuttle "Clark," formerly of New Hav., now of Worcester Co., Md., Dorothy Peck and Lydia Mansfield conv. to Roger Sherman land lying westerly from Y. C., a half acre, for £31, bounded south by (Chapel) st., west by homelot of Caleb Hotchkiss, 3d, north by Punderson Austin's land, and east by our own land. The dimensions were 67½ feet on Chapel st., by 83¾ feet in rear and 273½ feet deep (reduce from rods and fractions in the record). Consid. £31. Daniel Lyman and Samuel Mansfield, wit. In 1763 same parties conv. to Nathan Beers land in York-shire Quarter, bounded south by st., west by James Dunbar's land, lately dec., north by our own land, east by Stephen Ball's, about three acres; consid. £10 1s. Nathan Beers was a very extensive land owner, his possessions reaching westerly from York st. a long distance, and this supposed a part of that tract. Another convey. by Moses, the location unknown to me, was in 1754 to Ebenezer Punderson, of land laid out to "my great grandfather, Mr. Wm. Tuttle and my grandfather Thomas Tuttle."—*N. H. Thomas T. 1702. In 1739 he conv. 20 acres in 5th div. to s. Thomas. In 1743 he bought of Daniel and Abigail Atwater right in land laid out to John Newman; and eleven yrs. afterwards, 1754, Caleb's chil. sold it to Nath. Heaton. This conv. was made by James, Enos, Timothy, Abraham, Mary wf. of Timothy Ford, and Eliphalet of Litchfield. Caleb Tuttle was prominent in the first secession from the First Society, a movement which resulted in the face of a powerful opposition in the organization of the Second Ecclesiastical Soc. in N. H., now known as the "North church." The first meetings were held in the house of Timothy

Jones (s. of Dept. Gov. Wm.), whose wf., says Prest. Stiles, was sis. to Caleb Tuttle's 2d wf. This house stood on the northwest corner of State and Court sts. until about 1878 when it was torn down to make room for a fine block erected by Hon. J. E. English [4]. The house becoming too small for the growing congregation, and being refused a place on the public square, they built in 1744 on the cor. of Church and Elm sts. (now occupied by St. John's block), the lot having been previously bought by Caleb Tuttle and Joseph Burroughs, and conv. to the Soc. This house afterwards enlarged and painted blue was known as the "Blue Meeting House." Its bell when first hung, was heard it is said in more towns than any other bell in New Haven Co. It was eventually rem. to Cheshire, Conn., and hung in the tower of the Epis. chh. In 1748, when the society employed John Curtis to preach, Caleb Tuttle and wife and David Punderson and wife, Thankful, conv. a half acre and 17 rods, fronting 100 feet on Elm st., for a parsonage lot. Caleb and his wf. Hannah had become owners of two-thirds of it by deed from her sons Joseph and John Todd in 1726. This was the Blue Meeting house parsonage lot, and is now the site of St. Thomas' Epis. chh. Mrs. Hannah Tuttle d. Oct. 27, 1748, in her 65th yr. Caleb d. 1751, intest., and court appt. s. Enos admr.; inv. £193; mentions 4 acres in Yorkshire Quarter. Prest. Stiles in his Hist. of the Judges says of Caleb Tuttle: "He was a plain good man whom I well knew, a man of integrity, very intimate with Gov. Jones' son, they having married sisters. * * * He was a zealous religionist and warmly captivated with characters distinguished for holiness and piety, and according to my idea of the man, whom I well remember, he would, I should think, have listened to the anecdotes and history of these pious and heroic sufferers with avidity and curious and feeling attention. I doubt not he knew more about the subject than all his posterity, and he is the source of the information concerning the Whalley Stone." [App.]

Sept. 24, 1750; d. 1824, a. 74 yrs.; s. of Ambrose, s. of Ambrose, s. of Wm., magistrate at Milford. A great reader and an original thinker. His chil. all grew to age of maturity except one; and it was their custom to gather annually on Thanksgiving day if no other. All the family were noted singers, and when the dinner was over all would rise and sing the old fugue tune, "Ocean," a hymn of praise and thanksgiving, beginning, "With songs and honors sounding loud." The children were educated under earnest religious influences, and were taught to endorse the traditional calvinistic faith and doctrine, until Mrs. Rhoda Fowler fell a victim to it in a religious-calvinistic mania, which continued many years; this modified essentially the views of some of the family. Noah Fowler championed the rendering of church music by a regularly organized choir separated from the congregation. Twelve members of his family were members of that choir, and he was appointed leader. Dea. John Cook represented the old system and strenuously opposed the innovation, going so far as to interrupt the public religious service of the congregation and bring a civil suit in the courts. The world kept moving just the same and Dea. Cook was obliged to give way. Mr. Fowler lived to the age of 74, and his wid. to the age of 93. "The fragrance of their names has hallowed for a hundred years the home where they lived and died."—Hist. of Torrington.

In 1760, Phebe Tuttle, wid. of Joshua conveyed her right in this property to Asa Todd and Mary his wife. It is described as a house in New Haven and about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  acres of land, bounded by the highway or the market place; north on land of Benj. 4. Jonathan Tuttle, bap. in Charleston, Mass., July 8, 1637; m. Rebecca, dau. of Lieut. Francis Bell\* of Stamford; b. Aug. 1643; d. May 2, 1676. About 1670 he began a settlement near the Quinnipiac River in what is now the southern part of the town of North Haven, and soon after, Ebenezer Blakeslee John Humiston, Daniel and Thomas Barnes, Moses Brockett and later the Clarks, Todds and others settled near the center. All these families have intermarried with each other, generation after generation and in many instances relationships are unusually complicated. The settlement was very slow at first, and for many years some of the planters buried their dead and attended chh. in New Haven. Jonathan built a bridge over the Quinnipiac in North Haven, which was long known as "Tuttle's bridge," and by a decree of the court he was allowed to demand of each traveler passing over it, horse and man, 2 pence in money or 3 pence in pay (barter); exception was made in favor of deputies going to court. He was also allowed to take moderate compensation for any refreshment or drink furnished to travelers, except strong drink. Feb. 20, 1704-5, he conv. to Joseph Tuttle one-sixth part of the third div. that was laid out to Wm. Tuttle. He d. in 1705 and next yr. Simon Tuttle admr. his est.

IV. James Edward, b. March 13, 1812. When little more than ten yrs. of a. the independence, self-reliance and energy of his character was shown by his leaving home to shape his own course in life. He remained away between two and three yrs., working on a farm in Litchfield Co., meanwhile attending school in the fall and winter months. After returning home he attended a private school, and devoted himself to study for about three yrs., evincing a strong talent for mechanical and architectural drawing, in which he was given special instruction by his teacher. He was soon able to furnish building plans for the old master-builders of the city. About the age of 18 he resolved to learn the carpenter's trade, and served an apprenticeship till 21, when he began business for himself, and during the next two or three yrs. erected several handsome buildings from his own plans and materials. This field proving too limited, he started the lumber business in the face of great discouragements, and succeeded so well that in a few years he had diverted the entire trade from its seat on Long Wharf to his own locality in E. Water st. The financial panic of 1837, which ruined thousands of others, only enlarged the opportunities of Mr. English. He established himself at Albany, in the wholesale lumber trade, in addition to his New Haven business, and shipped large quantities of lumber to N. Y., Phila., N. Hav. and other points; became the owner of several vessels; established freight lines, and laid the foundation of his great wealth. His subsequent investments in banking, real estate and manufacturing enterprises were very successful, and he is now one of the richest men in Conn. Among numerous establishments with which he is or has been connected, may be mentioned the New Haven Clock Co., the largest concern of the kind in the world, of which he has been the principal business manager. And the Goodyear Metallic Rubber Shoe Co., a very large concern, of which he has been Pres.

His public life began on his return from Albany, when he was elected a member of the Board of Selectmen of N. Hav., and annually re-elected, serving for twelve years, most of the time as chairman. In 1848 elected mem. of the Common Council and to other positions, receiving votes of both parties. In 1855 elected to State Leg., and the three succeeding years served as State Senator, declined a renomination in 1859, business calling him to Europe. In 1860 chosen M. C., re-elected in 1862, serving four years. In 37th Congress was on the Naval Com., and his retention urged by Mr. Welles, Sec. of the Navy, for the 38th Congress; but in that Congress he served on committee of public lands, and on com. of public accounts for Dept. of State. During the war he was known as a war Democrat, voted for abolition of slavery in Dist. of Col., and for every Union measure, and gave liberally of his own means to prepare outfits for Conn. regiments. He opposed the legal tender bill, and the National Banking System, foreseeing their pernicious tendencies; and though largely interested in manufactures, he opposed "protection for the sake of protection." In 1865 declined nomination for third term in Congress. In 1867 elected governor of Conn., over Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, and in that term was the only democratic governor in all the states. In 1868 elected governor over Marshall Jewell by an increased majority, and the same year his name was prominent in the Dem. National Conv. as a candidate for the presidential nomination. Nominated for Gov. in 1869, but through over-confidence of his party and apathy, was defeated. Next year again elected Gov. by a triumphant majority. In 1871, the people of N. Hav. who were strongly excited on the pending question of making Hartford the sole capital of the state, elected Mr. English to the lower house. In Nov., 1878, appointed by Gov. Ingersoll to be U. S. Senator in place of Hon. O. S. Ferry, dec., term ending March 1, 1879.

"I happened to be present," writes a journalist, "when Mr. English went to the pay-clerk's office to draw his first instalment of pay. Finding that compensation from the date of Senter Ferry's death was subject to his draft, he remarked: 'I have no moral right to money I have not earned, and will not appropriate one cent of pay which has not accrued since I arrived and was sworn in,' and he didn't."

He was the pioneer and champion of the movement by which the public schools of Conn. became entirely free. Previously, a quarterly payment was required from each scholar. This payment was burdensome to a large class, and debarred many from public instruction who most needed its advantages and benefits. A determined opposition to the abolition of this tax was met and overcome by Mr. English, and the state assumed the entire expense of the public schools. His services to the higher walks of education have been recognized in his appointment as one of the councillors of the Sheffield Scientific School. Among his large gifts to the educational, religious and charitable institutions of this city is a fund of $10,000, the income of which is to be devoted in perpetuity, to the purchase of books for the library of the Yale Law School. He is much interested in antiquarian, genealogical and historical matters relating to his native city and state, and his knowledge in these directions is extensive and exact.

It is very rare, indeed, that the same man succeeds in gaining the highest prizes at once of wealth and political preferment, and that, without making enemies, and without a suspicion of crooked ways. In the city of his residence, where he is universally known, and where his large material interests bring him into personal and business relations to a multitude of people, he is accounted one of the most useful, charitable, philanthropic, and public spirited of its citizens, and in point of popularity and general estimation, it would be difficult to name his superior. The degree of A. M. was conferred by Y. C. His full length portrait adorns the library of the Law School; m. Jan. 25, 1837, Caroline, dau. of Timothy Fowler of N. Hav., who d. In 1834 his son Arvid put up the shop which with subsequent additions became the organ factory. He m. Polly Flint. 1, ARVID, b. 1814; a great lover of music from his earliest years; his mother having a marvelous memory for poetry, and love of song. He easily learned to perform on various instruments when quite young and was mainly instrumental in getting the first band organized in Wolcottville, Conn. He began to build pipe organs in 1840 but soon turned to reed instruments and is believed to be the first who built organs of this kind in America, and he is really the inventor of a large proportion of the improvements that have been made on them in this country. He also invented a new principle for tuning organs, known as the Tuner's Gamut, in extensive use. He never took out patents for his inventions but freely exhibited them for the purpose of selling the instruments. Others adopted them, forming companies with large capital to make organs with his improvements. Some of the most finished workmen in the largest manufactories in the country learned their trade of him. The most important improvement ever made in reed organs was a superior arrangement of the reed board the principle of which was the subject of a great law suit in 1876 between Riley Burdett of Erie, Pa., and Jacob Estey of Brattleboro, Vt. This improvement Mr. Dayton invented and had used some twenty years; which was clearly shown by the Hon. Wm. M. Evarts in his speech in that case before the U. S. circuit court, and also in the speech of the Hon. Edmund Burke, the celebrated patent lawyer. Mr. Burke said of Mr. Dayton that "he was one of the earliest, most original and ingenious inventors and improvers of the reed organ who has ever appeared in this country." One of his instruments made nineteen years before containing all the combinations of musical capabilities of the infringing organ was examined by counsel and others and still made good music, though it had never been repaired or even tuned. "It is believed," said Mr. Burke, "that few if any other reed organs have ever exhibited such a remarkable endurance. * * * A noble testimonial to the genius and fidelity of its inventor and maker. * * * A thorough test of the workmanship and material used in its construction. This was one of the earliest productions in the art of organ making in the U. S." 4119. Deborah Dayton, b. Aug. 8, 1724; d. May 29, 1817, a. 93 yrs. For several years before her d. had been the oldest person in N. Hav. Saw her gr. gt. g. c. and her surviving desc. of four generations were just equal in number (93) to the years of her life. She partook of the holy communion with members of four generations of her desc. and pronounced her blessing on three of the 5th generation. She could remember when there was but one house of public worship and but one minister in N. Hav.; when there was not one painted house, nor one pane of sash glass, nor one riding chair in the town; when all the foreign trade employed but two small vessels, and when the first timber was laid for the "long wharf." "Funeral eulogies," says the Conn. Journal of June 3, 1817, from which the above facts are taken, "are too frequently extravagant, but the writer feels compelled to say that if the uniform practice of industry, prudence, fidelity and benevolence, springing from vital piety, deserves the esteem of fellow mortals, let the memory of the deceased be regarded. She was an uncommon woman in her day, stout and robust in form, of strong, well balanced mind, of excellent judgment, and a vein of pleasant humor. Intelligent people from a distance sought her society to enjoy her original, independent and shrewd remarks. She was familiar with the Bible, with writings of Flavel, Baxter, Edwards and Bellamy; had seen and conversed with Washington, and had heard Whitfield preach. She bore her long illness of nearly five years with patient resignation. In answer to an inquiry once put to her by the Rev. Dr. Mason, she replied: "Having through divine grace been able to resist the attacks of the adversary for nearly sixty years, I shall not be left to fall into his hands at last, but feel sure of victory through the crucified, risen, reigning and all conquering Redeemer." He lived in the house built by his father in 1731, which stood until 1871, when it was removed by Joseph E. Sheffield on whose estate it stood, to make room for the "Sheffield Scientific School building." Nathan Mansfield was a loyalist in the revolution, and during the British occupation of N. Hav. in July, 1779, many whigs sought refuge in his house, and under his hospitable roof were protected from injury and insult for two days and one night, or during the occupation of N. Hav., by the enemy. His bro., Rev. Richard Mansfield, D. D., who also was a loyalist in the revolution, lived to great age and was present at the dedication of Trinity chh. (Epis.) in N. Hav., 1814.

I. Charles Burrill, b. N. Hav., March 12, 1807; his f. did not inherit the money-making capacities of his race, and his lot in life was humble and laborious. With his father he learned to gather and sell clams to help out a meagre support. From the a. of 13 he was compelled to care for himself. He went to sea awhile, but afterward learned the trade of cabinet making. When he desired to marry, he went to Judge Daggett, who set him up in business. He seems to have done undertaking to some extent, for he put Noah Webster into his coffin; and John Trumbull, aid of Washington, into his.

He was always an urgent reformer, and ready with voice and pen to help on every good work. Ardent in the temperance movement; then, in 1854, he entered with his usual belligerent energy into the Kansas Anti-slavery War. In 1856 he concluded to form a company to colonize in Kansas, and in furtherance of that enterprise the celebrated meeting in the North chl. in N. Hav. was held, at which a quantity of "Sharpe's rifles" and a sum of money were subscribed to arm and equip the emigrants. He left New Haven the same year and settled with his colony at Wabauensee, now a flourishing agricultural community; and Kansas, the dark and bloody ground where the battle of freedom was fought and won, is now a great state of a million of inhabitants, more or less. In 1871 he was appointed pension agent for Kan. He m. in N. Hav. Jan. 18, 1829, Maria Woodin, b. Bristol, Conn., Jan. 7, 1808; golden wedding celebrated at Wabauensee, 1879. 4164. Abner Johnson, b. Aug. 6, 1738; Y. C. 1759; stud. theology and preached for a short time but gave it up on account of ill-health (hypochondriac). He established himself as an apothecary in Waterbury, in 1773; the first in that whole region. The place has not been closed since he bought it, and it still remains in the family (Leavenworth and Dikeman). He was town clerk of W. in 1804; d. 1817; m. June 3, 1773, Lydia, dau. Ebenezer and Lydia (Clark) Bunnell of Cheshire, Conn., a woman of great energy.

41642. Fanny Johnson, b. Feb. 28, 1776; d. in W. May 14, 1852, a. 75; m. May 19, 1796, Frederick, son of Col. Jesse* and Catherine Conklin (wid. of Capt. Culpepper Frisbie of Branford, Conn.) Leavenworth, b. in W., Feb. 4, 1766; M. D.; d. May 17, 1850. When quite young rem. with his parents to New Haven, where his father resided for some yrs. on the south side of Water st., near the Pavilion Hotel building. At about 17 years of age, left to his own resources, he shipped under Capt. Holmes of New Haven and made several voyages as mate and supercargo to southern ports, West India Islands and "the Spanish main." Located awhile in the Island of Trinidad, took the yellow fever and "returned home to die," but recovered instead. Stud. med. and practiced successfully awhile, but gave it up and went into the "Southern trade." Afterwards engaged in manufacturing in Waterbury, where he was postmaster upwards of 20 yrs. preceding his death. He was a man of extensive and varied knowledge, keen sarcastic wit and strong sense of humor; deliberate in forming opinions but decided and tenacious; independent, but of quick sympathies; his religious opinions different from those held by most of his friends, gave rise to a want of sympathy keenly felt by him; and resulted in his later years to a certain studied disregard of some conventionalities, amounting to eccentricity. (Sketch by Hon. F. J. Kingsbury, Leavenworth Gen.)

I. Lucia Leavenworth, b. March 24, 1797; m. at West Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 22, 1826, Rev. Asa M. Train, pastor of the 2d Cong. chh. at Milford, Conn., 22 yrs, where he d. * Col. Jesse Leavenworth, b. Nov. 21, 1741; Y. C. 1760; m. July 1, 1761, Catherine, dau. of John Conklin of Southampton, L. I. Tradition says a very handsome couple. He was Lieut. of the Gov.'s Foot Guards (Benedict Arnold, Capt.), and went with the Guards to Boston (1776) "with old Put Along." Fred followed them to the outskirts of the town. The Co. returned in about three weeks. Col. Jesse was engaged in commerce and once lost in Hurl Gate a sloop laden with flax-seed. He owned the ferry to East Haven, where Tomlinson's bridge and the steamboat wharf now are. When the British invaded N. Hav. in 1779 they robbed his house, ripped up the feather beds and emptied them into the water, and did much other damage, besides taking the silver buckles from Mrs. Leavenworth's shoes, while she stood by and gave them, as she used to say, "a piece of her mind." She had a keen black eye and a sharp tongue, and in after years perhaps not without sufficient cause, she turned it on her husband with such efficacy that he sought shelter in the wilds of Vermont. About 1783 he became alienated from her and taking the younger children he left her forever. There may have been fault on both sides, but apparently mainly on his. He took a woman with him who had been an inmate of his family, and whom he afterwards married, some sort of divorce having been obtained. He d. at Sacket's Harbor, Dec. 12, 1824. He was son of Rev. Mark Leavenworth, and his wife, Ruth, dau. of Dea. Jeremiah Peck, son of Rev. Jeremiah Peck, and Joanna, dau. of Robert Kitchell; she m. (2) Capt. Culpepper Frisbie.—Leavenworth Genealogy.

IV. Abner Johnson Leavenworth, b. July 12, 1803; d. Feb. 12, 1869; Amh. Col. 1825; theo. at Andover; licensed, April 22, 1828; stud. with Rev. J. Hallock of Canton, Conn.; student and asst. at Troy Rens. Inst.; one yr. princ. of acad. at Boxford, Mass.; sup. Cong. chh. at Orange, Conn., one yr.; ordained pastor at Bristol, Conn., Dec. 16, 1829; dis., Sept., 1831; rem. to Charlotte, N. C., and was pastor Presby. chh. and principal young ladies' school. Here he labored with zeal to wake up the people to the importance of education by lectures, newspaper articles, pamphlets, almanacs, etc. In summer he traveled among the mountains, hunting with the pioneers, talking and preaching Sundays. In 1848 he rem. to Warrenton, Va., for benefit of health of his family, where he established a school. In 1839, having been called to the new High st. chh. in Petersburg, Va., he left the school temp. in charge of his wife. This chh. grew out of a difficulty in an older organization, and was without a building. Under his management they soon had a handsome edifice with organ and bell. He remained here about four years, and the new chh. was finally absorbed in the old one. Afterward, he preached to destitute chhs. in different parts of the state, and gave his energies to a school he had re-established in Petersburg, which soon rose to great importance, attracting scholars from long distances, and flourishing till the breaking out of the war. In the great struggle he sympathized with the South and promoted its cause with all his energies. At its conclusion he again turned his attention to educational matters, and at the time of his death was Cor. Sec. of the Va. Educ. Asso., an organization created mostly through his efforts, and through which he hoped to develop some broad plans of educational interest. He was of medium height, rather slender, thin, light hair, bright blue eyes; carriage, very erect and dignified; of great energy, physical activity and personal courage. A bold and vigorous writer, and a ready and eloquent speaker, and an accomplished scholar, both in literature and the sciences. Whatever he put his hands to was apt to prosper. As a teacher, his talent amounted to genius. A remarkable combination of exciting enthusiasm in his pupils, of communicating knowledge, and a dignity of manner by which he could maintain discipline with little apparent effort. On the occasion of his d., Feb. 12, 1869, commendatory resolutions of the highest character were passed by the various bodies to which he belonged. (See portrait in Leavenworth Genealogy). He m. For four years the pair earned only a scanty subsistence, young Packer working a small farm and doing odd jobs at his trade. At the time of the opening of the Lehigh Canal in the spring of 1833, he became a canal boat driver. With his earnings he gradually was enabled to buy interests of his own in a number of boats, and, retaining these, he gave up driving, and opened a store and a boat yard. Afterward he contracted for the building of locks in the upper Lehigh, and soon his fame as a contractor became great throughout the region. In 1838 he built boats at Pottsville for the transportation of coal to New York direct. In 1840, leaving his boat building business to his brother, Mr. Packer removed to Mauch Chunk, and for many years engaged in the shipment of coal. In 1852 he alone began the building of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. In 1855, when it was completed, he was all but ruined, but, aided by Commodore Stockton, he survived his temporary embarrassments, and his road rewarded him to that extent that for many years he has been accounted the richest man in Pennsylvania. Mr. Packer was twice elected to Congress, and served under the administration of Mr. Pierce. He built for himself a beautiful residence at Mauch Chunk, which was his home."

*To the Editor of the New York Times:—In a recent review of a "Life of Hamilton" your reviewer goes out of his way to stigmatize Aaron Burr as a "wretched adventurer," evidently on the assumption that "he has no friends, therefore kick him." The animus of that review is apparent, and it is evident that old wounds still fester. But wherein was Aaron Burr an "adventurer?" As Colonel in the Revolutionary army, or Attorney-General of New York, or Senator from the same great state, or Vice-President of the nation, in all of which offices he won the plaudits of the people? Or was it when entertaining the chiefest men of two continents at Richmond Hill, or during the delivery of that matchless oration on taking leave of the Senate, which melted even grave Senators to tears? In point of pedigree, Hamilton was certainly the "adventurer," for Burr was descended by both parents, from two of the proudest and best families of New England, as certain printed works in the Astor or Mercantile Libraries will prove to the curious. In point of fact, the whole treatment of Aaron Burr is a disgrace to our boasted civilization, a rank instance of the ingratitude of republics. The Federal party, the Presbyterian church, the Virginian faction, the Clin-on-Schuyler-Hamilton-Livingston faction of New York, all pitted against one lone man, was a spectacle for gods and men; but the same united in an effort to blacken his name and memory, and continuing so years after death, ought to provoke the indignant protest of every lover of justice and fair play. The victim, too, is quiescent. Often and often Col. Burr was urged by his friends to reply to the calumnies circulated about him. "What can I do," he would say, "all my valuable papers were lost in the shipwreck that bereft me of my daughter; let them do with the old man as they will, the truth of history will yet appear," and so Burr's friends have been passive, and the ghoul of church and state have had it all their own way. I wish to say, in conclusion that I have studied Aaron Burr's character, career, ideas, habits, and hereditary tendencies thoroughly, and in the light of an intimate knowledge of his family, from the advent of his first ancestor at Boston, in 1630, and am well convinced that he is worthy to take rank with any of his peers in the affections of his countrymen, and am amply amazed at the mists of ignorance, calumny and misapprehension which have been collected about the name.

V. Lydia, m. Burton Tuttle; (2) Amos Fish of Albany, N. Y.; d. 1877. "Amos Fish, who died after a long residence in this city, left property amounting to $50,000.
The will has not yet been presented for probate, but is said to contain some singular bequests, and is likely to be contested. The widow, who has been his wife for thirty-five years, is allowed $1 a day as long as she lives. He was an eccentric man. In explaining the way he lived to a friend once he said: 'I buy a shank of beef from the butcher, which costs me ten cents. My wife makes enough soup from this to do us one meal; then the meat cut from it afterward makes two more meals, or one day's food for ten cents. I split the bone and get the marrow for cooking purposes, and my wife finds sufficient fuel in the bone itself to do considerable cooking. Then, in an iron box I save the ashes, which I use for manuring a few plants that realize for me six cents each.'
Yet when extra taxes were put upon his property he very rarely, if ever, demanded more rent from tenants than they had been paying. He considered anything more than plain and cheap dress for man, woman and child, extravagant. Mechanical labors he encouraged, and would prefer to let one of his stores to a business of this kind than for other purposes. He considered the jewelry and other fancy trades wholly unnecessary, and by no means would encourage them."—Albany Times.

4524. Lois Tuttle, m. abt. 1754, Thomas Davis,* b. 1729; d. Nov. 15, 1798. She became acquainted with Mr. D. while at the boarding school of Rev. Mr. Bird in New Haven. Her parents and relatives in North Haven being strong Congregationalists, were opposed to the match for the reason that Mr. D was an Episcopalian. She was taken home and he was forbidden the house. She, however, left her father's house in North Haven one summer evening, walked to New Haven and was m. and had 16 chil., of whom 4 d. in infancy; 12 were living at close of rev. war. Their gr. s., C. S. A. Davis, has pub. some interesting family reminiscences of the British raid in 1779. Thomas Davis was in the skirmish at West Bridge, but seeing that the town would be taken hurried home, hid his gun and silver and awaited events. A squad of soldiers soon entered his house and rummaged it for plunder, but did no further damage than to crack a China punch bowl (which is now in possession of Mr. C. S. A. Davis), and drink some St. Croix rum. It was one of this squad that killed Mr. Hotchkiss and took his watch which he showed to Mr. Davis. Mrs. Davis had sent her son Solomon down to the garden, "on the shell road," as Wooster street was then called. This garden occupied the whole square bounded by Chapel, Wooster, Chestnut and Franklin streets. The

In 1750 he rem. to New Haven and began business as sail maker, the first in the town. He afterwards engaged in a general merchandising and shipping business with St. Croix and other W. I. Islands, and in 1758 took in Mr. Sandford, f. of the late Anthony P. Sanford of New Haven. This co-p. continued till 1798. Davis and Sandford with six others built the old Trinity church in Church street, which was afterwards twice enlarged, and taken down in 1819. The workmen "boarded round" among the £ until the church was finished. Thomas Davis built his residence on Fair street, and owned the whole square bounded by Fair, Olive, Cherry street and Prindle Alley, except a lot on corner of Cherry street and the Alley, which belonged to Simeon Joselyn. Mr. J. furnished Benedict Arnold with his rig and equipment, as Capt of the 2d Co. Gov.'s Guards, but was unable to get his pay. Arnold's letter from Canada to Mr. D. declining to settle was in possession of Mrs. Canby, but could not be found among her effects on the division of the est. in 1836—lost. In 1760 Mr. D. received a China punch bowl from St. Croix as a present. It was first used in 1766 at the birth of his dau. Mary. On her m. with Mr. Post, it was presented to her. It was cracked by the British July 5, 1779, while rummaging the house of Mr. Davis for valuables. Wm. Buel mended it with silver clasps. C. S. A. Davis inherited it from Wm. Canby.

soldiers found Solomon here and took him prisoner to their camp near Mill river, where he was employed to bring water. He soon escaped and ran to a lot near Whitneyville where his father's cows were pastured and drove them up to his Grandfather Tuttle's in North Haven. Mrs. Davis sent her young daughter Mary for safety to the house of Abiathar Camp (a loyalist), which stood corner of Chapel and Union streets, site of the present Masonic Temple. It was the headquarters of Gen. Tryon, and a nice dinner was being spread for the officers when an alarm was given by a sentinel in the steeple of the church by ringing the bell, that the militia was approaching the town in great numbers, upon which Gen. Tryon gave orders to embark, and left hastily with his officers without eating his dinner.

45421. Caleb Tuttle, b. Dec. 7, 1760. His father, when drafted into the Rev. army, having a farm and a numerous family of young children, could not be spared, and Caleb said: "I will go in your stead." Accordingly he applied to the Col. Return Jonathan Meigs, and was accepted. At the expiration of his term he enlisted again, served through the war and was honorably discharged. He was one of the 40 "picked men" selected by Gen. Anthony Wayne (Mad Anthony) for the advance parties—"forlorn hope"—at the storming of Stony Point*. The story of his sufferings from cold, hunger and nakedness at Valley Forge and while fighting to achieve the independence of his country is that of hundreds of others, and in the later period of his life he endured much from lameness and otherwise in consequence of this early experience. He was over six feet high, well proportioned and of great strength and courage, but good-natured and of a jocular turn withal; when in the army he was challenged by a fellow soldier to fight a duel, but declined on the ground that as to fighting, their country needed their services, and it would be more proper to fight the enemy than each other; but to give the challenger the "satisfaction" he sought he proposed that his own profile should be drawn in chalk on a barn door and the challenger to fire at it to his heart's content. This raised a laugh, restored good humor and perhaps averted a catastrophe. But there was a limit to his forbearance. In Hartford once he was provoked by a swaggering bully of large proportions into whipping him, which he did easily and in short order. After the war he began the business of boating on the Conn. river between Hartford, Conn., and Windsor, Vt., carrying merchandise of every sort and establishing stores at Hartford and Windsor, Vt., the latter a wholesale store, which supplied all the towns about Windsor. At South Hadley and Bellows Falls freight was unshipped and carted around the Falls. He was the first man to carry out the daring project of running freight boats over the Falls at South Hadley, which he did alone and unaided. He also engaged in the West India trade. His affairs were for a time very prosperous and his wealth considerable, but his large business requiring more attention he took in as partner a young man of good (?) business education, but as it proved, of dishonest character. The loss of a West India vessel with a valuable cargo leading to an examination of the books of the concern, frauds were discovered, which, together with losses by undersigning, swept away the bulk of his property. He possessed a fine mind, an excellent memory and so kindly a spirit that all his sufferings, misfortunes and disappointments were not able to sour him, and which, when old, lame and helpless, endeared him to his children and friends. He received a pension from the U. S., and on the list of 1840 is called of West Springfield, aged 79. He d. thr. March 20, 1845, in 85th yr. of his age; m. in 1784, Mary Masters of Middletown, Conn., who d. in W. Springfield Aug., 1842.

*The advance or "forlorn hope" at the storming of Stony Point consisted of two parties of 20 men each, who led the attack at two different points. One of these, under command of Lieut. Gibbons, lost 17 men killed and wounded out of the 20. The other party under Lieut. Knox was not less exposed but more fortunate. All behaved with distinguished bravery. Wm. Reed (ante) was in one of the parties and said to have been the first man to enter the works.

III. Eben Clark, b. April 27, 1806. His youth was spent at home, he helping his father, chopping timber, clearing land, burning and carting coal, and working at his father's forge. His time for schooling was very limited, and his lessons studied for the most part while blowing the bellows, or in the "coal hut" on the mountains while tending the coal pits. At the age of 20 he went to Straitsville, Conn., to work at making forks. Three years later he returned to Prospect and began making the solid cast steel hoes of the "goose neck" pattern, of which he was the originator, and which eventually wholly supplanted the "eye hoe" made by blacksmiths throughout the country, and in universal use. At first his hoes were made entirely by hand in his shop on Prospect Hill, and to produce 25 hoes, required the labor of 8 men for one day; subsequently by the use of water power and of machinery, much of it his own invention, the same amount of labor sufficed to produce several hundred highly polished hoes.

The first machine used by Mr. Tuttle was a crude trip-hammer, which was located five miles distant at Union Village, in Naugatuck; and which was available for his use only at night. For several years all the hoe blanks were carted to this place, the hoes plotted during the night and carted back to Prospect the next morning. The demand for his hoes increasing fast, he rem. in 1846 to Union Village, erected a small shop and began to make use of the fine water power and additional machinery; and added the making of many kinds of agricultural tools, as forks, etc. The business soon grew to large proportions and more capital and managing agencies were required, which were obtained by the formation of a joint stock company, under the name of the Tuttle manufacturing Co., with Mr. Tuttle at its head. This company is now rich and powerful and is still known by the name of its founder. In 1856 he withdrew as Pres't. and built a factory near the depot in Union City, where for about two years he did a large and constantly increasing business under the name of the E. C. Tuttle Manuf. Co., which bid fair soon to become as extensive as the original Tuttle Co., when in 1858 his works were destroyed by fire, inflicting on him very heavy losses. In 1860 he went to Oshawa, C. W., where he organized a company and built the large "Cedar Dale Works," which now rank among the most important manufacturing concerns of the "Dominion." The ground on which these works are located was covered with forest and swamp, and in the severe labors of clearing the site, building dams, factories and starting the trade, he overstrained his physical powers and laid the foundation of a fatal malady. His business relations here not being satisfactory, he returned in 1864 to "the States," and at Auburn, N. Y., organized a company and built the works of the "E. C. Tuttle Manuf. Co.," now called the "Auburn Manuf. Co." He here continued successfully about four years. In 1868, leaving a large interest in the Auburn concern, he returned to Canada and at St. Catharines started the manufactory known as "The Welland Vale Works," in which he unfortunately lost a large part of his hard earned estate. He continued his business and residence at St. Catharines until a short time before his decease. In the winter of 1873, while on a visit to his friends in Conn. he d. Dec. 5, 1873, at the house of his son, B. B. Tuttle of Union City, of paralysis. "His reputation as a manufacturer was almost world-wide, and when the history of the manufacturing founders of the Naugatuck Valley shall be written his name will be among the foremost. He lived to see the business he commenced in a small way, grow to almost gigantic proportions; and the little hamlet of Union City, which, when he went there, contained scarce half a dozen houses, by his enterprise became one of the first manufacturing villages of the Naugatuck Valley."—Communicated. He m. In 1877, for the purpose of bringing up a declining school, he took temporary charge of it, and d. in the midst of his scholars of heart disease, from which he had suffered for years. He was revered as an educator, philanthropist and Christian. His grave-stone is inscribed: "Dr. Charles William Tallett, d. Feb. 28, 1877. Called to teach, and teaching when called," the closing words of a memorial by an old pupil, Alphonso A. Hopkins, editor of the Rural Home of Rochester, N. Y. Almon Lee Tuttle, Esq., to whom I am indebted for this record of Ezekiel Tuttle, jr.'s, desc., says: "I knew C. W. Tallett intimately from a boy; with more continuity of purpose, his remarkable versatility and genius, must have made his name known to fame." 1, CHARLES HENRY, b. Whitesboro, N. Lieut., 1st Lieut.; served four years." This modest and characteristic response was from Lieut. Tallett to a request from A. L. Tuttle, Esq., for his military record. From other sources Mr. Tuttle learns that Lieut. Tallett was a very efficient soldier. His regiment in some of the severest engagements of the war, and himself in over 30 pitched battles; with McClellan on the Peninsula; in the hottest of the Gettysburg fight; I believe at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. He was in the battles of the Wilderness, and was never wounded or sick enough to be compelled to go into the hospital. He was in easy sight of the place where Grant and Lee conferred before the surrender. He is now a farmer and market gardener in Watertown, N. Y., and a most worthy citizen. He m. 45493. Melieu Tuttle, b. June 18, 1775; his father dying when M. was about nine yrs. of a., leaving the family in destitute circumstances, Melieu at once manfully confronted the difficulties of the situation and succeeded in overcoming them. About 1795, he went west, into the wilds of central New York, and located some wild land in what is now the town of Columbus, Chenango Co., cleared a patch, built a log cabin, returned to Mass. and m. 1795, Lovisa Bishop, and took her back to his cabin in the woods. The wolf and bear and other wild denizens of the forest their only visitors, and some Indians who had not yet made up their minds to leave the graves of their fathers and depart for the land of the setting sun, occupying a wigwam on a part of his premises. Here they lived and labored, the husband over 70 yrs., the wife over 50 yrs., and brought up their family of six children. Being very ingenious in mechanical contrivances, he became indispensable to the other new settlers who afterwards came in. He could build a log cabin, make an ox sled or cart, a built plow, a meat cask, a sap pail, etc. His powers of physical labor and endurance were remarkable. He would go two miles to the farm of his bro.-in-law, do a large day's work logging and chopping, then back a bushel of grain a mile to the mill, have it ground, and then back it home three miles, in the dark, through woods and along a dim path marked only by blazed trees. Once it was necessary to go 16 miles to the mill at Burlington Flats with grain; having no vehicle, he hung a bag of two bushels between two oxen and started. Three miles short of the mill the oxen could bear the load no further. Melieu took it on his back, and on arriving found the mill "closed for repairs," and had to return without his grist. Subsequently he improvised a cart without wheels which answered as a vehicle for bringing home the grist. He once walked the entire distance to New York City (250 miles) to make payment on his land, crossing the Hudson by swimming with his clothes bundled and strapped to his back. He was kind, honest and faithful, and long lived to enjoy the fruits of his labors and the esteem of his fellow citizens. He d. July 31, 1872, in the 98th year of his a. His wf., b. June 9, 1778; d. Mrs. Thorpe was at the Tuttle meeting in 1873 with 3 gr. chil., Eliza, Charlotte and Julia. "A very pleasant and rather remarkable event took place at the house of Mr. Joel Bassett in North Haven, Thursday. The event was a family gathering in honor of the eightieth birthday of Mrs. Amasa Thorpe, and was remarkable because four active old ladies, all sisters, were present, the aggregate of whose ages is 310 years. The sisters were Mrs. John Goodsell, aged eighty-three years, Mrs. Amasa Thorpe, aged eighty, Mrs. Itamar Tuttle, aged seventy-seven, and Mrs. James Smith, aged seventy. Of a family of nine children of Jesse and Patience Bassett these four are the only living members, four having died in infancy and another daughter departing this life some thirty odd years ago. The Bassett family was one of the first which settled in North Haven, and the old homestead is yet to be seen standing a short distance from the bridge. Jesse, the immediate ancestor of this branch, lived on the spot where his namesake Mr. Jesse Goodsell now resides, and here the four sisters were born and brought up in the ways of good old New England life, replenishing the family wardrobe by means of the knitting needle, the loom, and the spinning wheel, converting the products of the dairy into butter and cheese, and taking their share of fun at corn huskings, candy pullings, etc. The paternal Jesse lived to the advanced age of eighty-five years, and Mrs. Thorpe, or "Aunt Chloe," as she is familiarly called, has in her possession likenesses of both parents which are well worth seeing. It is said that the old gentleman had no need to wear a wig at an age when most men are compelled to do so or give up the luxury of hair, and as he invariably presented himself with each particular hair in its proper place he came to go by the expressive name of "Slick Head Bassett." He was the second man in town to own a one horse wagon. All of the sisters have been married and have reared families. For several years it has been their custom to unite in celebrating each other's natal day, but this time the pleasure was increased by the unexpected participation of children and grandchildren, including one great grandchild, nearly all of whom were present."—Newspaper, 1877. 1, Loyal. 3, AURELIA, b. 1800; m. * "I claim to unite in myself through the three families, Tuttle, Read and Teed, the ten tribes of Israel who were carried captive, or the eight tribes of the ten in which the ten were lost in the Assyrian captivity, 3,755 years ago. The Tuttle, Teed and Read family constituted one family, the name of which was Tut, pronounced in Hebrew with the long sound of "u" or Toot. The lost tribes located in Media and Cyrus, who conquered Babylon, was a descendant, through Media of the lost tribes of Israel. The people are the descendants of the lost tribe of Isachar. The promise of restoration through the male will was made to this tribe and the family name Toot was to be the antitypical name of the restoration or the second coming of Christ. The Hebrew word Toot means the collector of the people. Of course I have not time to give you the evidences, but I give you the above simple facts. You do not bear of your present work as a part of a chain of natural evidence of the natural line of the branch promised as the restorer of Judah and Israel."—Letter to the Comp. from Cyrus Romulus Teed.

(April 9, 1871), of congestion of the lungs, Hiram Ayers in the 67th yr. of his age." The above announcement will be read with sorrow by all who have ever know the worth and character of the deceased. In many respects he was an extraordinary man. His memory especially was better than that of any other man in the county with whom we have ever been acquainted. As a surveyor his services throughout the northern part of the county, where titles were disputed or lines were with difficulty traced, were invaluable. As a witness in contested cases, as an adviser in neighborhood misunderstandings, his opinions were frequently sought and depended upon. Mr. Ayers was for several years supervisor of the town of Fairfield, and his name had frequently been mentioned in connection with higher positions. Few men in the county would have been more generally missed, or more sincerely mourned."—Little Falls Journal, April, 1871. 1. EMILY, b. March 11, 1837. 2. ROMÉYN B., b. April 6, 1838. 3. "In a letter to me," writes Mr. Griswold, "he says, 'I was ever under a strong impulse to embody in language my thoughts, feelings and fancies as they sprung up in the presence of the rude but beautiful things around me; the prairies on fire, the sparkling lakes, the park like forests, Indians on the hunt, guiding their frail canoes amid the rapids, or standing at night in the red light of their festival fires. I breathed the air of poetry.' His principal poetical work is Ne-mah-min, an Indian story in three cantos, in which he has made good use of his experience in forest life." "TREASURY DEPT., WASHINGTON, Nov. 1, 1866.

Le Roy Tuttle, Esq., having been appointed and commissioned Assistant Treasurer of the United States by the President of the United States, I have, with the consent in writing of the Secretary of the Treasury, authorized the said assistant to act in my place and stead, and at any and at all times to discharge any or all of the duties required by law of me as Treasurer of the United States. His signature, hereto countersigned, will be regarded, when affixed to any official paper emanating from this office, as having the same force and effect as if signed by me.

F. E. SPINNER, Treas. U. S."

"When speaking of Treasurer Spinner some time ago, we incidentally mentioned Assistant Treasurer Le Roy Tuttle. He is worthy of more particular notice. Tuttle is a business man. There is no more flesh on him than there is on a liberty pole or a zig-zag fence; but as much life and 'get up and get along' in him as in a cameleopard chased by lions. He is, in short, the embodiment of activity; and what he always means is business—the getting ready for business which requires one to move around lively. If any one was ever born a business man it is Le Roy Tuttle, now one of the Assistant Treasurers of these United States, and twelve years ago the cashier of a bank in a small city out West. A vast sum of money has been paid out of the United States Treasury since Tuttle has been here. He has had many men under his management. We believe but one ever deceived him and brought him to grief. Indeed, the Treasury here has been surpassingly free from defalcations and embezzlements. Such crimes have been too often committed, but in nearly every instance they have occurred after the money had been lawfully taken from the Treasury. Mr. Tuttle is entitled to a large share of credit, as well as Gen. Spinner, that such is the fact. In person Mr. Tuttle is small in stature, but so wiry and active that I think he must get over more ground than any other man in the Treasury. He can talk to a dozen persons, and keep on writing at his desk just as though no one were present. Notwithstanding the vast amount of business to which he attends, he has always found time to read a great deal, and is a highly intelligent gentleman. He is always uncommonly well informed as to all passing events, being a constant, judicious reader of newspapers."—Washington Corres.

City, he passed a ferry gate unobserved, not knowing that a fare was due. Aug. 21, 1820; d. May 9, 1877; at a meeting of the N. Hav. Board of Councilmen the following resolutions was unanimously adopted: "That in the death of Hon. William Fitch, the late Mayor of this city and Paymaster-General of the state of Conn. during the late war, New Haven has lost one of its foremost citizens, and one whose place in the community it seems impossible to fill. Conspicuous for his public spirit; prompt and untiring in the discharge of every duty; freely spending his strength in the support and conduct of our local charities, in whose behalf he cheerfully assumed many a burden from which others shrank; always to be found at his post in whatever position he was called to fill; holding office with reluctance, but administering it to universal acceptance and with a single view to the public good, he was a man without reproach and without an enemy. Resolved, that in token of our respect for his memory the Court of Common Council will attend his funeral in a body." Similar resolutions were adopted by the Board of Road Commissioners; by the New Hav. Savings Bank, of which he was President; by the Second National Bank, of which he was a Director; by the employees of W. & E. T. Fitch, among others: "That we have lost a true friend, one ever interested in our welfare and to whose benevolence, purity and nobleness of character we would add our testimony;" by the New Haven Orphan Asylum, of which he was Secretary and Treasurer and member of the Advisory Board and by the General Hospital Society of Conn., of which he was Vice-President, and of which "he was the main pillar," and to whom, "more than to any other single person, is due the extension of the buildings and conveniences of the hospital, which have of late so greatly widened its field of usefulness. Ready and wise in counsel; prompt and efficient in action; giving of his time and his means with unsparing generosity, few charities have ever known so faithful and self-sacrificing a friend. He rendered important services to the city and state; but in this hour, the fittest eulogium seems to be the simple words with which such as he are welcomed to heaven, 'I was sick and ye visited me; naked, and ye clothed me.'"—William Fitch Memorial; which also contains funeral services. VIII. Edwim R. Wheeler, b. Sept. 14, 1824; school teacher; went South and built bridges thr. He was a master builder of high grade; he also manufactured sashes, doors and blinds. When secession began he refused to vote that ticket and was given ten days to leave the country. Sacrificing his property, he started for the North with a mule team, but could get no further than Weathersfield, nr. Dallas. He managed to "keep out of the draft" until 1863; then conscripted and sent to the front; served in the cavalry; soon deserted; reached the Union lines in Arkansas; enlisted and served to end of war; during the war went to Lexington in the enemy's country on furlough, and brought away his family under difficulties and dangers that to most men would have seemed and would have been insurmountable. Armed to defend his life, he hewed the timber in the woods to make his wagon; made raw-hide ropes for traces and secured three yokes of oxen for a team. His furlough was for 60 days, though he was three months absent, but was finally mustered out and honorably discharged with the rest. His health was broken by sleeping on the ground and exposure, which resulted in consumption. He went to California by medical advice and d. in Sonoma, March 27, 1877; he m. abt. 1852, Joanna A. Mason at the destruction of the Pequot Fort (See Hartford in the Olden Time); rem. to New Haven, 1642; offered one-third of an unclaimed allotment in the Governor's Quarter on conditions that he never complied with, namely, that he would build a house thereon and devote himself to making wheels and ploughs for the good of the colony. In 1669 he was a commissioner with Samuel Bishop and three others, to meet five commissioners from Branford, to establish boundaries. In 1675 he commanded the New Haven troops who, at Norrituck, defended the plantation against the Indians. His military rank was Capt. He was representative in the General Assembly 24 sessions from 1666 to 1683; d. 1685; inv. £270. He was excused from watching in 1685, "being an impotent man, having lost the use of one of his feet, and now having two sons in the public service;" (these must have been the two eldest, viz.: Joseph and Samuel, aged respectively, 17 and 15). 61. Joseph Tuttle, b. March 18, 1668; m. in Milford, Conn., by Gov. Treat, Nov. 10, 1691, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas and Elizabeth (Paine) Sanford, b. 1671. He lived in E. Hav.; prominent and active in local affairs. In 1707 the village of E. Hav. voted 600 acres of land to be sold to raise money to defend themselves in law suits against N. Hav. This tract lay between the Pond and the Bull Swamp bridge. The buyers were Wm. Luddington, John Russell, John Moulthrop, Joseph Tuttle, Daniel Collins and Jacob Robinson. About Feb. 15, 1707, Sergt. John Potter and Joseph Tuttle were directed "to attend a town meeting in New Hav. to obtain their consent that this village (E. Hav.) be settled a distinct town"; granted by the assembly the following spring, and Joseph Tuttle was elected Rep. to state Leg., May and Oct. sessions, 1710, though the assembly denied the right of E. Hav. to send deputies. At a court held at N. Hav., 2d Monday of Nov., 1695, judgment for £100 and costs was rendered against Joseph T., cordwainer, in favor of Joseph Blydenburgh of New York; Joseph T. appealed to court of assistants held at Hartford May 10, 1697. In 1712 he sued Ephraim Morgan, an Indian, for debt. He was related in some way to the Coopers.† (The will of his bro. Stephen Tuttle, dated 1709, calls John Cooper cousin and appoints him one of the exrs. As such John Cooper took receipts of the heirs of Stephen Tuttle in 1725.) He was assignee of Sarah Cooper of Long Island. She was sis. to James and Ellis Mew. In 1706 Mr. Blin, mariner of Boston, and Joseph Tuttle claimed the estate of Ellis Mew, tin worker of London, from whom Blin showed power of attorney. James and Samuel Cooper were also akin to the Mews. James Mew lived in South Wood street, London.

*Nathan Bradley, b. 1638; came from England, a boy; landed at Saybrook; thence journeyed across the wilderness (then unbroken by settlements) to New Haven. He set. in Guilford. He was quite a hunter, and discovered the sources of the Hammonaset river in a pond which is still called "Nathan's Pond." For a bear story in which he played a subordinate part, the principal being borne by the bear, see Barber's Hist. Coll. of Conn., p. 225. He m. (3) May 10, 1668, Rachel Holton, dau. of Dea. Wm. of Northampton, Mass., and wid. of Thomas Strong; Nathan Noah Bradley, exr. of the will of Nathan Bradley of Guilford, paid legacies in 1711, Dec. 11 and 31, to Mary Tuttle, Patience Eaton, Esther Marshall; wit. to Mary Tuttle, Isaac Griswold and Wm. Rogers; wit. to Patience Eaton, Jonathan Murray and Joshua Tuttle.

†"John Cooper, agent of the iron works at Stoney River, came to New Haven between 1639 and 1645, (name was spelled Cowper); Rep. 1664-7; may have settled first at Lynn, Mass.; interested in the iron works there. If so he embarked in the Hopewell of London, April 1, 1635; b. at Olney, Bucks Co. (birth place of the poet Cowper, sometimes spelled Cooper) 1594. He may have gone from Lynn to Southampton, L. <sup>4</sup>This is the highest elevation on the east side of New Haven harbor. It is or has been known by so many names that its general designation is not easy to determine. On its north end was the great burying ground of the Indians. In 1822, Rev. Mr. Dodd opened three of the graves, and others were opened 50 or 60 years earlier, and Indian implements, it is said, were found in them. It was called Grave Hill. The Indians also had a fort on it, hence called Fort Hill. It was also called Indian Hill. Its commanding position and comparative height made it suitable for a point of observation and for beacons, and one was erected there in 1776 by the town of New Haven, and "fired" at 6 P. M. on the 20th of Nov. of that year, the neighboring towns having been previously advised to take its bearings so that they might know what it meant in case of alarm. For the same reason that made it Beacon Hill it was Prospect Hill, and it richly deserves a less hackneyed name. As early as 1821 and probably much sooner, it was called "Tuttle's Hill, and is frequently so named in old records. It was included in Wm. Tuttle's grant, and remained in possession of his male descendants for several generations. In 1814 a rude fort or earth work was erected on its summit by New Haven people, assisted by the neighboring towns. In October, 100 men from Cheshire, under Andrew Hull, worked two days and returned through the city in wagons, with music playing, and saluted by cheers from the citizens and discharges of canon. The next day 100 men from North Haven, under their pastor, Rev. Dr. Trumbull, worked on the fort, and the next day 100 men from Hamden, under Capt. Whiting, carried on the work. Meriden also volunteered. In the center of this old fortification now stands a flag staff of the U. S. Coast Survey for purpose of triangulation. Northerly from Tuttle's Hill a little way, there is a lower elevation, on which the East Haven reservoir has just been built, which is also called Tuttle's Hill, but hereafter will probably be known as Reservoir Hill.

Hav.) is occupied by his gr. s. Hiram Jacobs, Esq. The situation is very romantic and beautiful. The farm was a part of one of the divisions to Wm. Tuttle, and has been owned continuously by his descendants since it was bought of the Indians. Christopher Tuttle's gr. s., J. W. Bradley, book publisher of Phila., employed R. Norris, the landscape artist, to make an oil painting of the place, which is now in possession of Mr. B. i. by 1st m.

Samuel Page of Branford and had several children. Jared Mansfield was much attached to Joseph Tuttle and came for him to go to West Point. In a letter from West Point Sept. 3, 1814, to his father (remarkably well written in all respects) Joseph says: "Mr. Mansfield (Col. Jared [3]) is gaining slowly. I go up to Newburg every other day for provisions, but do not row the boat. Disappointed in not being able to go west; wanted to travel. Does not like so much distinction at West Point; no middle rank; all officers or waiters, which accords with Mrs. Mansfield's feelings but not with Mr. Mansfield's. Joseph cannot foresee any advantage in staying at W. P. and will leave next spring. Has been offered $25 a month for 6 months to teach school in the 9th district of Orange Co., N. Y. Scholars from 15 to 20 years of age; to teach the three R's, the last (arithmetic) principally, the parents being all Dutch; board $3 a week exclusive of washing. "I offered to go for $30 a month, which I do not think they will give. The Dutchman said further: 'If you will learn dem well, sar, ich will insure you the best girl among dem all.' I thanked him for the offer but did not think best to choose on these conditions, and presume you will not censure me," wants to hear from all the family, and from Mercy's and what Capt. Morris has had to say, for I believe he was determined I should train. I shall not train here and do not fear the enemy, but fear an ungarded powder magazine 160 or 200 yards off, with 2,500 barrels of powder in it and no sentinel on guard. The late news make our Democratic heroes curse their luck. Mr. Mansfield has put his boy, Edward D., into the military school; an excellent chance, and if I were under 21 yrs. of age should prefer it to any other. P. S.—Since I have been here I have not slept with Mr. Mansfield, nor got up a night." I. MARY ANN, b. 1816; d. July, 1833, a. 17; teacher; very beautiful and estimable. One of her school mates, it is said, wrote a poem in her praise.

IV. Smith Tuttle, b. March 12, 1795; d. March 5, 1865. He entered the firm of John and Elijah Rowe, taking the place of Elijah on his retirement. This was then and for many years the principal store in Fair Haven. His business gradually extended and he became largely engaged in the New Haven and West India trade, for which he built and owned several vessels. He also traded to several South American ports and San Francisco. Firm of Gillette, Hotchkiss & Tuttle. He owned a great deal of land at the West, and sold $50,000 worth at Nauvoo, Ill., to Joseph Smith, for a Mormon settlement. He imported the first cargo of oysters from N. A., and his office was the headquarters of the men who entered early and built up this great business, many of whom Smith Tuttle helped with his money. He may therefore be called with propriety the founder of the oyster trade of Fair Haven. He was a large hearted and public spirited man, quiet and unostentatious. He was one of four citizens, who, in 1830, caused "The Old Brick Church" to be built, Mr. Tuttle heading the subscription. Once when in N. Y. city an emigrant packet arrived loaded with passengers half famished with a long course of short rations. Mr. Tuttle quietly bought a dray load of bread for them which they eagerly devoured, but never knew the name of their benefactor. He was rigidly honest and carefully shunned extravagance in manner or dress. One of the last acts of his life was to give $12,000 to the New Haven Orphan Asylum. The bulk of his large estate was divided one-third to the widow, one-third to his dau. Mrs. Emma Bradley, and one-third to his son S. G. Tuttle. "Pending litigation in regard to the division between 1875 and 1881, the income of the estate amounted to $70,000."—New Haven Paper. J. D. Gillette* and Geo. H. Scranton, execs. He m. New Haven papers published extended obituary notices in which her character is described as "radiant" from a rare union of accomplishments, of endearing qualities and of christian virtues. Among her ancestors, traced back by her son, Capt. Charles H. Townshend, to fifty or more of the first settlers of New England, are John Howland and John Tilly of the Mayflower, and perhaps Gov. Carver, whose dau. Elizabeth may have been wife of John Tilly; m. Dec. 3, 1820, Hon. Wm. Kneeland, s. of Isaac and Rhoda (Atwater) Townsend, b. June 3, 1796 (bro. of the late Prof. Isaac Henry Townshend of the Yale Law School).* Merch.; director of the New Haven Bank; Pres. of several corporations and associations; Lieut. 2d Co. Gov.'s Horse Guards; just. of the peace; Rep. for E. Hav. in Conn. Leg. He retired about 1830 to his estate in E. Haven, called Raynham after the family seat of the English Townshends, ancestors of the E. Haven family, and d. there Sept. 23, 1849. This fine property is beautifully located on the east side of New Haven harbor, and is part of the original grant of the New Haven colony to William Tuttle.

I. Wm. Isaac Townsend, b. Nov. 28, 1822; m. April 22, 1850, Elizabeth B., dau. of Col. Mason A. and Elizabeth Bradley Durand, b. April 7, 1828 (2d cous.) 1. ELIZABETH DURAND, b. Feb. 11, 1851; d. May 27, 1857.

II. James Mulford Townsend, b. Jan. 20, 1825; Capt. of the "Grays" 1848; has filled various offices; Senator in Conn. Leg. 1864; was offered and declined the Repub. nom. for Lieut. Gov., and also for State Treasurer of Conn. During the war he raised and equipped the "Townsend Rifles," one of the companies of the 7th Conn. Vols.

Mr. Townsend organized at N. Hav. the 1st Oil Co. in the U. S. It was called the Seneca Oil Co., and at one time owned most of the lands about Titusville, Pa. Mr. E. L. Drake, a conductor on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R., was employed by Mr. Townsend as superintendent, at a salary of $100 a month. After spending about two yrs. and a good deal of money in experimenting, Mr. Drake was instructed to procure at Syracuse, N. Y., a man of experience in boring wells for salt, to bore at Titusville, Pa., for oil. Up to this time the oil was got in scanty supply by crude and inefficient methods, as ditching, trenching, skimming the water, dipping and wringing of blankets, etc. After boring about 60 feet all the men of means in the company (excepting one) becoming discouraged, refused to supply more money, and Mr. Townsend had to bear the whole brunt of the enterprise. In time he too became disheartened, and sent Drake $500 to pay bills and come home. The day that Drake received this money and order, the augur dropped four inches, (into a crevice probably) and the oil came up. The depth was 64 feet. This was the first well and the first petroleum raised in the U. S. The result was due to the energy and perseverance of Mr. Townsend. (See McCarthy's History of Petroleum.) Mr. Townsend sent a specimen of the product to Paris for analysis. It was carried by his bro., Capt. Charles H. Townsend, who also brought back the report of the chemist. It was highly favorable as to its lubricating and illuminating qualities, and predicted great results if the supply proved sufficient.

This was the beginning of that vast production and export which has brought great wealth into the U. S., and especially into the State of Pa.; which has been an important factor in turning the balance of trade in our favor, and in relieving the country in some measure from the gravest of the financial embarrassments brought about by the war; enabling the resumption of specie payments and a settled financial policy. A few weeks after the discovery of the oil, the entire works of the company were destroyed. The engineer, ignorant of the gas which comes up with the oil and which is now carried off through a tube in the well, entered the oil house at midnight with a light to see that all was right. The gas took fire from the lamp and several thousand gallons of oil went up with the works in smoke and flame. The oil was then selling at one dollar a gallon. The works were rebuilt, but by that time the production from other wells was so large that the price had fallen to one dollar a barrel. At that price there was no profit to the producer, and Mr. T. sold out. It is said that Humboldt left a sum of money to be given to the discoverer of petroleum or rock oil, and Mr. Townsend has been requested by eminent oil men in Pa. to put in his claim, but so far has not done so, and the medal is not awarded. There is also a proposition to erect a bronze statue at Titusville to Mr. Townsend as the discoverer of the product which has brought so much wealth to the State of Pa.

Mr. Townsend established the "Townsend Fund," with an yearly income of $100, to be given each year to that student of the Yale Law School who on graduation delivers the best written and best spoken English oration. Townsend Ave., East Haven, was so named in his honor; m. Sept. 1, 1847, Maria Theresa, dau. of Epaphras and Sarah (Hall) Clark of Middletown, Conn.; b. Oct. 10, 1828. VI. Charles Henry Townshend, b. Nov. 26, 1833; has been commander of packet ships and ocean steamers for several years; commanded the U. S. mail steamer Fulton of the Havre line; as commander of the steamship Ontario, 5,000 tons; he took her into Havre, France, laden with firearms, ammunition and equipments, to the value of two and a half million of dollars, of which the French government was sorely in need, during the Franco-Prussian war. The timely arrival of the Ontario—the Prussian advance guard being within 18 miles of the city—saved Havre from capture or assault and an anticipated loss of at least fifty millions of dollars. This achievement created great enthusiasm and delight in Paris and Havre, and Capt. Townshend was everywhere the object of unlimited courtesies and attentions; he was also promised a decoration of the Legion of Honor, but it has not been received. In all the years of his going to and fro across the stormiest of seas, he has never lost a dollars worth of property nor a passenger entrusted to his care. Plutarch tells us that in ancient Rome it was desired most of all to be considered fortunate, for good fortune was evidence of the favor of the gods. But to whatever his extraordinary success was due, the numerous testimonials of his grateful passengers, published in the newspapers from time to time, prove him to have been a prudent, efficient and very popular officer. In promoting the prosperity of his native city he is active and influential. The idea of the breakwater (suggested by his observations of similar works in European harbors) now in course of construction by the U. S. government for the improvement of the harbor of New Haven, was originated by Capt. Townshend, and to his intelligent, well-directed and persevering efforts, the public is indebted for an appropriation of $250,000 for the harbor improvement and for a re-survey of Long Island Sound, now (1882) in progress. The importance of the re-survey arises from the growth of N. Y. C. northwardly, and an anticipated change in the route of sea-going vessels. Capt. T. believes that N. Y. C. will in the near future reach across lower Westchester Co. and face L. I. Sound, which will become the great commercial highway between the U. S. and Europe. With all his business activity Capt. T. has found time to indulge his tastes for literature, and especially for antiquarian and genealogical research; tracing his ancestry in all its lines back to the first settlement of New England, some of them to the Mayflower exiles and some of them far beyond into the "dim obscure" of forgotten generations. He has compiled at great expense a Genealogy of the Townshend Family; author of several able articles in the N. E. Gen. Register. In 1879 he published by request of several prominent citizens of New Hav. a Centennial History of the British Invasion of New Haven, and is a frequent contributor to the public journals of highly-prized articles relating to the commerce of New Haven. He is the possessor, he supposes, of the only copy in this country of Price's celebrated Illustrated History of the Spanish Armada, which he has had reproduced by the heliotype process on a somewhat reduced scale, and has presented copies to the Y. C. library and to other public institutions. He is a director of the New Hav. Col. Hist. Society and of several other corporations; m. VII. Timothy Beers Townsend, b. Nov. 21, 1835; Y. Med. S., 1858; Phys. and Surg.; appt. by the State of Conn. with Dr. Rockwood to visit the Conn. troops after the battle of Fredericksburg. During the war he rendered efficient service as surgeon at Knight's Hospital. In 1867 he was selected by a council of physicians in New Hav. to perform the cesarian operation, one of the first in this country and probably the first in New England. There had been at that time only a few successful operations in the whole of Europe; he had witnessed it in Paris and had stud. in Europe. The operation in New Hav. was completely successful; he was a surgeon of great skill, rapid and careful; he was offered the professorship of surgery in Yale but declined. For several years his health has been poor, owing to a partial sunstroke and to overwork.

The first meeting of the Epis. Society of E. Hav. was held at his house March 31, 1788, and he with James Pardee were the first chh. wardens. He rec'd. by w. of his f. the "Fort Hill" lot, the lot on which stood the new barn, the Indian hill and Tuttle's hill, besides other property. With other E. Hav. men he opposed the British raid on N. Hav. July 1779, but seeing the day was lost, endeavored to save some of his goods which he had loaded on a cart and was trying to conceal, when he was captured, taken to New York and kept a prisoner abt. six months when he escaped or was released. When the E. Hav. defenders retreated past his house Mrs. Tuttle ran out with her four children, one of them in her arms. and in her fright tried to follow her retreating neighbors, but finding that she was between the combatants, and the enemy about to fire, she called to the children to lie flat on the grass and say their prayers for they had but a moment to live. As they lay on the grass a volley from the British passed over their heads, and wounded, it was supposed mortally, Charles Pardee, who, however, eventually recovered. Mr. T.'s house was ransacked and afterwards set on fire. Among the things carried off was an old family Bible printed in London, 1663. Ten yrs. afterward it was found in Wallingford. Timothy Tuttle, described her as a woman of great energy, decision of character and fervent piety. He lived on a part of the paternal est., now known as the Townsend farm, or Raynham; his house and barn was burned by the British, July 5, 1779. That morning he had sent his wf. and children and a part of his household effects up country for safety, but remained with his eldest s. and witnessed the burning of his property.* He also saw the killing of Jacob Thorp the same day on his own land. After the war, he built a little south of the old site, a fine location, commanding a beautiful view of the city, harbor and sound, a large double house. At the S. E. corner of this house the Tuttlés erected a plain stone, inscribed, "Here fell Jacob Thorp, July 5, 1779." This stone has disappeared, "but," says Capt. Townsend, "it will be found some day no doubt among the stone of the fence." This property was bought by Isaac and Kneeland Townsend, who removed the house to its present location, on the corner of the Fort Hale road. In 1863, Rev. Timothy Tuttle then in his 82d yr. and abt. a yr. before he d. visited the spot with Capt. Townsend and pointed out the place of the old wells, of the Thorp memorial stone, and of a honeysuckle that was growing in his early days, of which nothing but the stump remained. "But after his death it started again and became a thrifty vine."

Feb. 14, 1856, of whom her husband says: "I never could have lived upon my small salary but for the industry and economy of my wife." When his brethren have expressed their surprise that with his resources he had not only lived comfortably, but had laid up something for his children, and had never sent the poor empty away from his door, he has replied, in his laconic manner, "That woman did it." The following is from a biog. mem. written by his gr. s. Wm. Tuttle Cook, and read at a meeting of the trustees of the Bill Library, of Norwich, Conn., by whose order it was published; dedicated by the writer to Hon. Henry Bill of N. "who at all times was a true and faithful friend to the subject of this sketch:"

"I was the youngest of eight children, six sons and two daughters. My childhood and youth were spent in my native place until I had entered my eighteenth year, in the spring of that year (1799), my parents removed from East Haven to Durham. That removal was the occasion of changing my course of life. I went there with no other expectation than that of being a farmer. Strange it is, that I have since found myself invested with the ministerial office. O, how unworthy for such a place. In my childhood, I know not that there was anything distinguishable beyond what was common. My childhood was allotted to me rather in the lower walks of life. My parents were not absolutely poor, but they had suffered severely in property in the revolutionary war, by British violence. Consequently, we were far from having all those comforts of life which people now have. I was a feeble child, but it was necessary that I should be doing something, and by doing something in the field, or by using the oar, at the latter of which I became an expert, I have no doubt I prepared myself for endurance. I came up, however, like a plant of late growth. My means of education were scanty, though not more so in my case than in that of others similarly situated. The only branches taught in the common schools of that day were reading, writing and arithmetic; though in the last of my schooling at East Haven I got hold of a small system of geography." His mother was a woman of great energy and decision, joined to fervent piety, and he thus alludes to her religious influence, aided by the Assembly's Catechism:

"Toward the close of the Sabbath, my mother would take me and my brother next older, into a room by ourselves and teach us the Catechism, and now I must confess, it was that mother's restraining influence and counsel that kept me from many a wrong act. Without her watchful care over me I should never have been what I am." That mother lived, not only to see her son a preacher of the Gospel, but to visit him at his home among the people of his charge. He says: "After we removed to Durham, some of my friends fancied I was qualified to teach a school, and I suppose I was willing myself to think so, and accordingly I commenced in the town of Branford. But after teaching, or pretending to teach, four weeks, the committee of visitors chose to let me off, and gave me leave to withdraw. They ought to have examined me at the first. That was the sorest trial I had then ever met, but it was good in the end: the best thing that could then have been done, for it gave me a spring, and a determination that I would know something. I went home sad, but soon a man of education came into Durham and commenced a school, and many of my age, some older and some younger, and I among the rest, went to his school to study English Grammar. I was determined that I would not be outdone by anyone, and I believe I was not. The opportunity gave me celebrity in Durham and brought me more directly to the knowledge of our minister, Mr. Smith, the teacher having been his classmate. I then for the first time, came in contact with Murray's Grammar, and during the following summer I devoted every leisure moment to the study of it from the beginning to the end, examining every sentence till I understood it.

"In the spring of 1803, while teaching in the village of Durham, a revival of religion commenced, the first I ever knew anything about. I believe it was the first in that place, for it seemed to be a new thing to the old people there; the place had been noted for balls, and the business of the ball-room was conducted systematically; none were admitted to the higher grade but by vote, and the managers assigned to each his partner. Some young persons had already become hopefully converted and had forsaken the ball-room, but there was considerable strife in some to keep up the balls in opposition to the revival. I did not act in opposition to it as some did, for I dared not in conscience say it was false. Religious persons frequently accosted me on the subject. I felt there was a reality in religion, but was for deferring it." At this time, a female friend, Mary Norton, who afterward became his wife, took advantage of a growing mutual attachment to press upon him immediate attention to religion, exhorting him to seek the Savior in all the ardor of her own new born hope. He says, "It was as unexpected as if a voice from the other world had spoken to me. I was surprised and confounded. Then I came to the resolution that I would delay the business of religion no longer." After passing through many struggles with his own heart, he came at length to trust in Christ, was filled with joy and peace in believing, and united with the church in Durham on the first Sabbath in November, 1803. No sooner had he made profession of religion than his pastor began to urge him to fit for college, "but," he says, "how could I engage in such an undertaking? I had not the means. I was born in sight of Yale College, and though an education there was highly desirable in my mind, and always had been, still I could see no way in which it could be accomplished." He, however, commenced the Latin Grammar about the 20th of November of that year, and in ten months was examined and entered Yale College. He says, "When I commenced fitting for college I had seventy-five dollars ($75) on hand, which I had earned by teaching, and I made that go as far as it would. But how insufficient was that to defray the expenses of four years in college! I had to work my way as I could, but O, the trial, the labor, the anxiety of mind! I know how to pity the young men who have thus to work their passage. Some of the time during the four years I knew what it was to feel the gnawings of hunger for weeks in succession, and to wet my pillow with my tears." At one time as he was passing a baker's shop, he saw some rolls of bread in the window, and having a few pennies on hand he stopped and inquired the price of a roll. The baker said, "That is bread." "I know it," was the reply, "but I want it." Finding that it was within his means, he bought and carried it to his room and there feasted upon it. He said had he not been so far from home his mother would have supplied him with food. "But," he continues, "now, on looking back, I feel glad that I had those trials to pass through, for they taught me how to live. In college, notwithstanding the shortness of time in which I had to fit, I obtained a respectable standing, being about midway among the first third of my class."

After leaving college he taught school a short time and then commenced studying theology with his pastor, Mr. Smith, teaching Mr. Smith's boys to pay his board with him.

The next May (1809) he was licensed to preach "much sooner," he says, "than I ought to have been. But Mr. Smith thought I should do well enough. Then came the sober realities of life. I had got to make my way in the world by some means, but by what I could not foresee. My object in obtaining an education was, that I might be fitted to preach the Gospel to my fellow beings, not that I expected freedom from toil and anxiety, and perhaps much opposition from ungodly men, but that I might be of some use in the world." Mr. Tuttle came to the parishes of Groton and North Groton in April, 1810, being recommended to do so by a college acquaintance, the Rev. Hezekiah G. Ufford, who preached here a few Sabbaths previous to this time.

The church in Groton had been destitute of a pastor fifteen years. North Groton (now Ledyard) had had no settled minister for thirty-nine years. The church had become extinct, and there was nothing to remind one that there ever had been a church of Christ gathered here, except a church edifice in a state of decay, a few names of church members found on the society records and an ancient communion service.

Mr. Tuttle says in a sermon preached at the dedication of the present house of worship December 6, 1843: "The former house of worship was the first that was ever erected in this society. It was commenced in 1727, and though it underwent some partial repairs at different periods of its existence, it was never finished even till the day it was taken down. Every storm and every winter's blast had searched its crevices and found some way of access to its interior. It was erected doubtless by people of one denomination and for their own use, for it is not probable that there was then any religious dissent in the place. But during the long period of almost forty years, in which there was no settled pastor, the pulpit was occupied occasionally by preachers of almost all of the different denominations existing in this part of our country, and sometimes it stood probably for months unoccupied. I am informed that it once stood so for years, a place of the moaning—not of penitent souls, but of the winds and uttering the melancholy tale that 'truth,' or rather the love of truth, 'had fallen in the streets.' What its glory was during the successive periods of my predecessors, or what success attended their labors I have no means of knowing. There was a church in existence, organized it is supposed, about the year 1729. But no record of that church have I seen, nor was I ever acquainted with a single member of it. How long it had been extinct when I came to this place I know not. My settlement here was effected by men who remembered that in their younger days they had a pastor; principally must I attribute it to the influence of one man (Capt. Robert Allyn), and himself not a professor of religion. The present church was formed Dec. 12, 1810. Five persons, one male and four females, on that day met at the house of Stephen Morgan and signed the church articles, 'In the presence of Walter King, pastor of the 2d Congregational church in Norwich, and Timothy Tuttle, candidate for the gospel ministry.'

The names of those persons were Robt. Allyn, Esq., father of the Capt. Allyn above mentioned. He was then in his 83d year and had never before professed religion; Prudence Morgan, Priscilla Lee, Anna Gallup, Freeloove Morgan. All the females except one were far advanced in life. ●

Mr. Tuttle was ordained at Groton as Pastor of the First and Second Congregational churches in Groton, Aug. 14, 1811. He was expected to preach in each church on alternate Sabbaths and was to receive a salary of $450 per annum, each society paying him $225.

One reason why he was so deeply interested in the people of his charge, was the uniform kindness with which he was received. In the spring before he was ordained, he had a severe attack of illness at the house of Capt. James Mitchell, one of his parishioners, and the kindness of Capt. M. and his wife, together with the services of his physician, Dr. John O. Miner, gratuitously given, was ever remembered by him with gratitude.

Another thing which attached him to the people, was the large number of youth in the North Society, a fact which may be readily understood, when it is stated that seventy singers residing in that society, met at the old meeting house, and rode in procession led by their chorister James Geer, to the church in Groton to assist in the ordination exercises. They rode in primitive style on horseback with saddle and pillion. Several of that choir are still living.

There was much work to be performed in this new field. The churches in which Mr. Tuttle preached were seven miles distant from each other, and the parish extended several miles each way, beyond the churches. He sought by every means he could use to benefit his people both spiritually and temporally. The standard of education was low. English grammar was not taught in any school in the town. He visited the public schools, encouraged the introduction of well educated teachers, and during his residence among his people received hundreds of youth into his house, to be fitted for college or to become teachers in the public schools. He visited much among his parishioners, held weekly meetings at the school houses, and in dwelling houses, in the different parts of his extensive parish, and this practice was continued even to the last year of his life.

In 1822 the society in Groton requested Mr. Tuttle to relinquish fifty dollars of his salary, thus reducing their proportion to one hundred and seventy-five dollars. He did so, and continued to preach to them until April, 1834, when after having assisted them in erecting a new church edifice, he was dismissed, the most friendly feeling existing between them, which continued to the time of his death. He said in reference to his dismission, "I am tired of being half a minister." In the early stages of his ministry in North Groton (now Ledyard), Mr. Tuttle met with much opposition from the enemies of the truth. At nearly every meeting of the Ecclesiastical society, there was a conflict between its friends and its enemies. It was not on account of any personal dislike to him, but to the truth which he preached, and to the denomination to which he belonged. One of his most violent opposers on being asked, "How do you like Mr. Tuttle?" replied, "He wears well."

In March, 1834, the "Church and friends" in North Groton gave Mr. Tuttle a "call," requesting him to give them the other half of his pastoral services, which call he accepted on a salary of three hundred dollars per annum.

His ministry was blessed with several seasons of special revival, particularly in 1814, 1831, 1842, 1850 and 1858.

Still the days of darkness and discouragement were many. One communion service was held when there was no male member belonging to the church. Mr. Tuttle said in referring to it, "I borrowed a Deacon" from the Groton church. From the time of the organization of the church to the close of the year 1822, forty-six persons had been received to its membership, thirty-eight females and eight males, but the number of male members was soon diminished by deaths and removals, so that for several years previous to 1823, Warren Williams was the only male member in the church. He was deacon, chorister, and delegate to all meetings of consociation, ordinations and dismissals. He was, as a neighboring minister remarked, "Captain, mate and all hands."

But as time passed on and another generation came upon the stage, warm friends for whom the aged pastor felt strong attachments, were raised up, and towards the close of his life, it seemed a relief to him to feel that there were those upon whom he could depend to watch over this particular branch of the church when his work here was done, and in one instance, he made a special request to one of his friends, from whom he had received many tokens of kindness, that he should care for his people when he was gone, and it was a consoling thought that such a promise had been made him. Before the formation of the Sabbath school, the young people met their pastor once in two weeks to recite the assembly's catechism. A Sabbath school was organized about the year 1818. The manner in which it was conducted was entirely different from that of modern Sabbath schools. The children were required to learn verses from the Bible and hymns; the pastor heard the recitations, and a young man who was studying with him kept an account of the number learned. At the close of the school in autumn scholars were paid in books, at the rate of the value of a penny for ten verses from the Bible, and the same for twenty verses of hymns. Three little girls, Sally Sterry, Anna Billings and Tabitha Lamb recited each one thousand verses from the Bible, and each received a Bible as a reward.

After several years a proposition was made to establish a Sabbath school library; some of the young ladies started a subscription paper and obtained the sum of seven dollars, with which to commence a library.

At the close of the Sabbath school for the winter, a Bible class for young people took its place, the pastor prepared questions, and copies of them were distributed among the members of the class, who were expected to prepare answers in writing, and read them at the class meeting. From these small beginnings, the Sabbath school has increased till it has embraced nearly all the members of the congregation, and has obtained the name of "The Banner Sabbath School of the State."

An extract from Mr. Tuttle's half-century sermon will show how deeply he loved this institution: "Let me exhort you also ever to cherish a deep interest in the prosperity of the Sabbath school. You know there are many of the adult population around you who do not attend public worship any where, and the probability is that but very few, if any of them, will ever alter their course. What then you have to do is to labor to save their children from becoming home-made heathen, and since many of your own children are going to other parts, if you would have the congregation increase in members and strengthened, if you would, in a moral sense, lay a good foundation for those that shall come after you; if you would be instrumental in raising up a community who shall appreciate the institutions of the gospel, and be determined to maintain them, then let the Sabbath school be the object of your earnest solicitude, and untiring effort. I should be sorry to find a member of this church who feels no interest in the Sabbath school. I should fear that such an one had no interest in good things."

One of Mr. Tuttle's pupils says in speaking of him, "He was a man of few words, but those words were often proverbs in meaning. Discriminating and sparing in his praise, the parishioner or pupil was fortunate who drew from him even moderate approbation." The following are among the anecdotes related of him:

On one occasion after having performed a marriage, service, the aunt of the groom met him and asked, "What fee did you get?" he replied, "Can you keep a secret?" She says, "O yes;" he answered "So can I."

At another time he called on one of his parishioners after the family had taken tea. The lady of the house, who prided herself on the quality of her tea, prepared, as she supposed, a cup for him; after waiting a suitable time for his praise, and not hearing from him she says, "Mr. Tuttle, how do you like your tea?" He replied,

"There's no bad taste to it." When the lady emptied the tea-pot she found she had been giving her pastor warm water, the tea she had forgotten.

Several years after having left Groton, he exchanged with the minister then there, and the remark was made to him by one of his hearers. "You preached that sermon here before." He replied, "When you live up to that I'll preach another."

Again after having married a couple he turned to the bride, who was seated by his side at the table, and calling her by name, said, "Do you want to know how to have a good husband?" "Yes sir," she said. "Well! Be a good wife," was the rejoinder. Other anecdotes might be related, but these will show the peculiar vein of humor he possessed. During several winters in succession he delivered lectures on scientific subjects to the younger members of his parish. He lectured on Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Anatomy and Physiology; the last named subject was one in which he was very deeply interested. Mr. Tuttle's health was never firm, and for many years he had suffered from a disease (water on the heart), which must eventually destroy his life. In January, 1864, he went out on a severely cold day to visit some of his parishioners, and to hold an evening meeting. The effort was too great, and exposure to cold aggravated the disease. He remained at home one Sabbath. Afterward, though suffering greatly, he attended to his pastoral duties. In April he attended the ministers meeting at New London, and preached before his brethren in the ministry for the last time. His decline was so gradual as to be almost imperceptible to himself or those about him. He rode out, visited his people, and preached once on each Sabbath till within three weeks of his death. His days were passed in quiet, but his nights were attended for the most part with intense suffering. There was no severe pain, but an irregular beating of the heart, and difficulty of breathing deprived him of rest. Though he had not expressed the thought that he should not recover; yet it seemed to be in his mind. He appeared to be taking his leave of earthly things. He frequently went to the windows and looked out upon the trees and flowers which his own hand had planted, saying, "I never saw the earth look so beautiful before." A pocket edition of the Greek Testament given him by one who in the early part of his ministry studied with him, had been in his hands almost daily for years. Two weeks before his death it was laid aside. On being asked how many times he had read it through, he said he did not know, but mentioned the chapter at which he left off. After his decease the little well-worn volume was, according to his request, returned to the giver.

His sufferings now began to increase, so that they were as severe during the day as in the night, still there was no delirium, no forgetfulness. His domestic affairs were cared for to the last days of his life. He had expressed a desire to recover, and occupy his pulpit again, but, after being told that he seemed approaching his end, he gave up the thought, saying, "I wish I could preach one more sermon."

He spoke frequently of his own unworthiness, and of his trust in Christ, saying, "O, that I could have the lowest place at his feet, it would be enough." Once he mentioned dear friends who had gone before to heaven, saying to a member of his family, "I shall see your mother there, and I shall see McEwen." He then spoke of a beloved member of his congregation, who died a few months before, and said, "One day when I went to see Col. Wood, I found him in great distress, and said to him, 'There's no suffering in heaven,' he answered, 'I know it, I wish I was there,' and then he added, 'I hope I shall meet him there.'" He had words of counsel, warning or encouragement, and expressions of gratitude for kindness shown him, for those who called to see him. Three of his four grandchildren were from home, a grandson and two grand-daughters. The grandson he did not expect to see, but said, "I want to see the girls." A message was sent to them. One returned the week before his death, and it was her privilege, evening after evening, to sing to her beloved grandfather, those hymns so precious to him—"My faith looks up to thee," "Guide me O thou Great Jehovah," "There is a land of pure delight"—the last mentioned to his favorite tune of "Jordan." The other grand-daughter did not get the first message, and arrived only in time to receive his dying blessing. He had prayed that he might witness another revival of religion among his people. He seemed to have the assurance that there would be one; he said to his friends, "There will be a revival of religion, I shall not live to see it, but there will be one." At another time he said, "I fear that I love this church because it is my church, and not because it belongs to my Savior."

On the last Sabbath of his life he sent a message to an aged member of the parish. Early the following morning the old gentleman came to visit his dying pastor. His voice had then failed so that it was difficult for him to be understood. He said to a member of his family, "Tell him I want him to be a true follower of Christ." The old gentleman replied, with a trembling voice, "I am sure I want to be."

His strength returned so that he was able to converse during the day. He took leave of his family toward evening, remembering the absent one, and about 11 o'clock P. M. passed away, Monday, June 6, 1864.

In stature Mr. Tuttle was rather above the medium height, inclining in late years to stoop a little; in manner he was quiet and reserved; his style of oratory was not the most pleasing to the ear perhaps, but one on listening to him could not but feel assured that he was earnest in what he said, and his sermons lacked not for depth of thought. His style was clear and comprehensive, and he was careful to use no more words than was necessary to express his exact meaning.

For fifty-four years he was familiar with the affairs of this church and people, and often would he speak of the great changes which had taken place, not only in this immediate vicinity, but in the affairs of this great nation for whose prosperity he always felt an intense interest, and for whose success he expressed the warmest solicitude during our civil war, but whose triumph he did not live to witness. It seemed to him on looking over his past life, that but little had been accomplished, compared with the largeness of his desires, yet could we review the past, could we see this society as it was sixty-four years ago, could we watch the improvements that have been made through his instrumentality, we should realize more fully than we now do, that this devoted minister did not waste in idleness, or bury his talents in the earth.

Extract from funeral sermon by the Rev. T. L. Shipman: "Mr. Tuttle's preaching has been instructive rather than exciting. He has fed his people with knowledge and understanding. He has shown himself to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly divining the word of truth. His Greek Testament has lain on his study table, often consulted to catch the shades of meaning which no translation can convey. His style is a model of simplicity and perspicuity. While lacking the grace of elocution necessary to a popular speaker, he has nevertheless been a persuasive one, for his preaching has been enforced by the eloquence of a holy life. As a pastor, you know after what manner he has been with you at all seasons, with what fidelity he has testified repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, not only in the sanctuary, but from house to house and by the wayside, what a deep interest he has shown in all that concerns your welfare, what solicitude he has felt that after his death it may go well with you, and your children after you, with what sleepless vigilance he has watched over the lambs of the flock, and how he has prayed without ceasing for the the young, that they might be kept from temptation, and their feet guided in the way of peace.

"The cause of education has always found in him a warm friend and he has done not a little by personal teaching and courses of lectures, as well as by his visits to the public schools, to raise the standard of education here.

"The success which has crowned his efforts is well known not only at home but abroad, for Ledyard and Groton have sent forth not a few who have honored their early training and who cherish for their pastor the affection of children for a father.

"You feel to-day that it will be difficult to supply his place, and this feeling is the best tribute you could pay to his excellence. His brethren in the ministry share in your estimate of him. I have known him long and known him well, and the better I have known him the more I loved him. The service devolved upon me to-day is truly a labor of love.

"We shall miss him in our monthly meeting, we shall miss his presence, we shall miss his prayers, we shall miss the influence of his excellent spirit. His dissertations and expositions of scripture have been among the most valuable contributions to the meeting. Simple in language but rich in thought his articles have always commanded attention, and have elicited from those who have listened to them no small commendation. We all know what Dr. McEwen thought of his neighbor Tuttle. In the punctuality of his attendance, not only upon the ministers meeting but upon other ecclesiastical gatherings, and the anniversaries of important benevolent societies when the infirmities of age might have seemed to excuse him, he has left an example worthy of imitation. On occasions when difficult matters have come before the association or consociation, though his words have been few, his counsels have been wise and his judgment has had great weight with the body."

From personal reminiscences of Mr. Tuttle by Rev. James A. Gallup, a native of Ledyard: "We shall not cease to remember the marked simplicity of his character. Without pride or ostentation, opposed to all pretence and mere show in character and manners, never seeking great things for himself or his friends and content with small and honest gains, he lived among us unto the end. This simplicity pervaded all his habits of life and his intercourse with others. It characterized his conversation and his style of public address. True merit he was quick to see and admire, pretence he despised. Ideas he appreciated, but mere words however elegant and polished, were his abhorrence. He was himself a man of few words, but these words were often proverbs in meaning.

"He still lives in his patient example of industry. In his study or in his field he was pre-eminently an industrious man. At home or abroad, in his parish, he was never idle. He knew not how to be still when able to move. Few men have used more constantly or faithfully their full measure of strength.

"Nor shall we soon forget his public spirit. He entertained the most liberal ideas of culture and improvement. He believed in progress, material, intellectual and spiritual. He stimulated the young to think intelligently and liberally on all questions. He preached up benevolence as good economy as well as a christian virtue. The poor always found in him a friend. He took a deep interest in education, opened his house as a school for teachers, visited the public schools, gave lectures to the young people of his parish on the natural sciences and in every way aimed to awaken in all a liberal and cultivated spirit. He kept pace with the times and made himself familiar with the march of events and with the great principles involved in them. Though in no sense a politician, he dared to be a patriot, and to express with characteristic candor and plainness his love for liberty and the Union.

"He will live long in his great singleness of purpose. The spiritual welfare of his people was the one great absorbing thought of his life. The prosperity of Zion was his constant prayer and labor. He rejoiced in those seasons of revival that replenished her waste places and brought honor to her God. He longed for their return.

"His sermons and exhortations at all times bore witness of the earnestness of his desire for the salvation of souls. Though not especially gifted in persuasive private conversation with the impenitent, yet many will remember the somewhat quaint but often telling words addressed to them on some chance opportunity and if not always the most smooth and winning, yet no one doubted their sincerity or their force. He longed to see the church on a substantial foundation and to feel sure that it would never be less vigorous and hopeful than at present. Often, my friends, has he spoken to us of the prosperity of Zion when he should be gone. We shall also remember his strong attachment to the places and scenes of his early life. With what zest he revisited the old places, and re-called the early associates of his youth. What fresh and increasing interest he manifested towards Yale College both in its earlier and later history. Every year almost without exception found him at her annual commencement exercises. Before the era of railroads he failed not to pay his annual visit to his Alma Mater, traveling in his own private carriage and visiting at convenient intervals at the house of some friend on the route. His own struggles for an education made him the earnest friend of all who encountered similar trials.

"A self-made man himself, he had the highest esteem for all who by their own exertions rose to honor and usefulness, and the largest faith in the ability of all youth to make something of themselves, and I doubt not many have gone forth from this center of his influence inspired directly or indirectly with loftier faith and a nobler ambition than they would otherwise have had."

In 1807, under the preaching of Dr. Griffin, he became converted, and united with the 1st. Presb. chh. of Newark. In 1816, then comparatively a young man for the office, he was elected an elder of the church, which then numbered over five hundred communicants. For a number of years he was also a teacher and superintendent of the Sabbath school, and in the latter part of his life was made an almoner of the church, and devoted nearly all his time and all his income, excepting necessary support of his family, to visiting, comforting, caring for and relieving the afflicted and the needy. His death occurred suddenly from apoplexy, March 22, 1847. He had been attending to some business, and was standing on the corner of Broad and Market streets, in Newark, looking for his horse which he had left there, but which some boys had taken for a ride, when he fell and expired. Of his life and character the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen thus speaks: "I honor his memory. His life shone as that of a humble, consistent, heavenly minded Christian. There was a tenderness of spirit about him, an affectionate sympathy with his neighbors, and an honest heartedness that drew to him the love and esteem of his townsmen. He was an Israelite in whom there was no guile. He followed the Savior with humble and willing footsteps. He loved his closet and there recruited his strength for the conflict. His best, unmistakable memorial is the preciousness of his memory in Newark where he lived and died." The story of his life written by Pres. Tuttle of Wabash College is beautiful and impressive. It was first published by Robert Carter & Brothers of N. Y. Subsequently an edition somewhat abridged and containing a steel portrait was published by the American Tract Society; m. 631144. Jacob Tuttle, b. Aug. 24, 1786; New Vernon, Morris Co., N. J., apprenticed to a carpenter in Mendham, N. J., and the writer of this sketch met a lady in Pa. who said that Jacob, when an apprentice, had frequently walked four miles after his day's work was done to cut up wood for a poor widow in the village without pay. He was very assiduous in study during his leisure hours, and Dr. Amzi Armstrong, then minister at Mendham, encouraged him to begin the study of the languages, which he did, reciting to Dr. A. In 1808 he united with the Pres. chh. at M., and soon after entered the Bloomfield Acad., then almost as famous as Princeton. In 1812 he was examined and admitted to the junior class at Princeton, but for want of means was not able to continue and was obliged to return to Bloomfield. His acquaintance with classical studies was so thorough that when he was 70 years old he read and construed many of the text books readily. Indeed, his memory was so accurate that when he was nearly 80 years old he learned the entire epistle to the Hebrews, with his Bible class repeating chapter after chapter with great fluency. The shorter catechism, he could repeat questions and answers to the very last of his life, with a multitude of scripture passages and Watts' psalms and hymns. When on his death-bed, a beautiful octogenarian, he was wont to repeat the scriptures from memory and sing the hymns with perfect cheerfulness as if his chamber was the vestibule of heaven. In 1814 he began study of theology under Dr. Armstrong, and in 1817 removed to Newton, Sussex Co., N. J., and taught in the Academy there until 1820, when on the 20th of April he was licensed to preach by the Presb. of Jersey. The same year he was called to the West Milford church, Passaic Co. and ordained and installed Aug. 14, 1821. He labored here until Oct., 1832; the first four years with little apparent success. Intemperance was blasting all that was fair in that beautiful valley and he was about to give up when a remarkable seriousness was seen in his congregation, which was followed by an extensive revival. In the spring of 1832 another revival occurred, during which he and his devoted wife, a lady of rare excellence and intelligence, visited every house and cabin for miles in every direction, and their names are still held in great veneration in this region of their labors. In 1832 he removed to Ohio and engaged in home missionary work, planting several churches and everywhere honored as a true man of God. His piety was of a cheerful kind, which made him a welcome visitor in the homes of his hearers and especially in the sick room.

Mr Little

A few years before his death he received an injury which caused him great pain. Up to that time he had been a hale, active man, whose quick step and bright looks excited general attention. He returned to Jersey, Ohio, and spent the last years of his life in occasional preaching and other christian labors. His last year was one of rich spiritual enjoyment, and only a day or two before he died he was heard singing as cheerfully as a child the psalm:

" My spirit looks to God alone,
My rock and refuge is his throne,
In all my fears and all my straits
My soul on His salvation waits."

He d. Jan. 6, 1866. In Wilson's Presb. Almanac, vol. 9, from which the above sketch is taken, there is appended a beautiful eulogy of Rev. Jacob Tuttle by Rev. Dr. Cox. He m. Aug. 22, 1814, Elizabeth Ward of Bloomfield, N. J., b. Aug. 26, 1787; d. Aug. 29, 1871. She was the 8th of 12 children of Samuel Lawrence and Margaret (Farrand) Ward, who was of the 4th generation in descent from Geo. Ward of Branford, Conn.; Margaret Farrand was of the 4th generation in descent from Nathaniel Farrand of Milford, Conn.

I. Samuel Lawrence, b. Aug. 25, 1815; about the age of nine years he was sent to the Bloomfield Acad. During the revival there in 1835 he was converted, and began preparation for the ministry. In the fall of 1831 his uncle Wm. Tuttle of Newark took him into his own family and sent him to one of the best schools in the city. When his father removed to Ohio he remained in Newark, his uncle Wm. assuming all the expenses of his education. In the spring of 1837 he entered with his cousin Wm. P. Tuttle, the Soph. class at Princeton; "half advanced." Here his mind rapidly developed, and his class standing was high, especially as a speaker, and he was repeatedly elected to represent his class and society at public exhibitions. At his grad. in 1836 he was appointed one of the speakers. In 1837 he entered the Theo. Sem. at Auburn and took a high rank as a writer, speaker and scholar, and after the usual course of three years was licensed to preach Oct. 8, 1840, by the Newark Presbytery. He was soon afterwards called to, ordained and installed over the church at Caldwell, N. J. His ministry was successful and members were added to the church. He had the remarkable faculty of being able to call every person in his parish by their christian name. Finding his salary insufficient he was dismissed at his own request in April, 1849. He was employed for several years by the Am. Bible Soc., both in the Secretary's office and as general agent for Conn. In Jan., 1854, he was installed pastor of the chh. at Madison, N. J., and continued until April, 1862, when he resigned, much against the wishes of nearly all of his parishioners. He was then appointed agent of the Am. Bible Society for western N. Y., but in 1863 was invited to the Bible House as assistant to the Secretaries, which position he occupied until his death. In this position he displayed great talent, tact and industry, and was often sent to distant and important cities to represent the parent society. In April, 1866, he was attacked with inflammatory rheumatism, and d. on the 16th of that month. His funeral at Madison was an extraordinary one from the solemnity and deep interest manifested, and the great number who attended from Caldwell and other places near Madison. The Newark Presbytery, then in session, adjourned to attend the services. In person he was nobly formed and evidently very strong. His countenance bright and kindled quickly in conversation or public speaking. His voice uncommonly rich and powerful, delightful to hear, yet leaving the impression that its power was not fully exerted. Some of his sermons were fine specimens of effective eloquence and it was not unfrequent to see numbers of his hearers moved to tears. In prayer he had unusual gifts. The prayer he offered at the bedside of his dying father, the last visit he and his brother, the Presb. of Wabash Col., made to him, will not be forgotten. Those present say it was a marvelous prayer in its tenderness, earnestness and exalted faith, as if both father and son were then seeing God face to face. Those who wept under the power of that prayer did not doubt that the father would soon be in his Father's house, but they little thought that the son also was so near.—*Wilson's Presb. Licensed by Presbt. of Marion at Delaware, O., April 4, 1844. In Nov., 1845, went to 2d Presbt. chh. at Delaware, O. Ordained and installed pastor of same April 21, 1746. Dr. Henry Smith preaching sermon, and Rev. Jacob Tuttle giving charge. In Sept., 1847, accepted call to Presbt. chh. at Rockaway, N. J., where he continued until 1862; then became Pres. of Wabash college, at Crawfordsville, Ind., which position he now (1882) holds. He is the author of numerous published sermons, addresses, essays, etc., and of a life of his uncle, Wm. Tuttle, before referred to. He is one of the Vice Pres. of the New Eng. Genealogical Society; has taken much interest in this work, furnishing copies of his genealogical papers, and at the first family gathering in 1873, just two centuries from the death of Wm. Tuttle, delivered near New Haven the address to his descendants, which was extensively copied in newspapers, and afterwards published by request in pamphlet form. *A Sarah Tuttle, wf. of Stephen of F., d. there July 30, 1730.

†Ebenezer Lyman, jr., was the first permanent resident of the town of Torrington, son Eben., sr., Esq., of Denham, who followed his son to Tor. and was the first Dea. of the chh. (set apart Jan 1, 1742.) The lot of Eben., jr., in the western part of the town has been called the Lyman place ever since. The fort was built upon it. On a small lot adjoining he built a log house in which was b. June 16, 1738, his dau. Lydia, the first child born in the town so far as known; m. Stephen Tuttle as above.—Hist. of Torrington.

‡There are traces scattered through the histories of the Wyoming Valley of several families of Tuttle's whose records I have not been able to obtain. Charles Miner speaks of Thomas Bennett, "of a family renowned in that region for patriotism and courage," whose daughter, Mrs. Myers (16 yrs. old at the time of the battle), was visited by Prof. Sulliman, sr., to whom she related many interesting incidents relating to t. at event. Her mother was one of the only five women in Wyoming when Mrs. Young arrived in 1770. Her father, Thomas Bennett, escaped the massacre, and returned to W. in the spring and was soon captured by a party of six Indians together with his son, a lad, and Mr. Hammond a neighbor. The Indians marched them towards the north, and the second or third night Mr. Bennett concluded they were going to murder him. Watching his chance he killed the Indian on watch with his own spear, and loosing the bonds of Mr. Hammond and his son they attacked the other five, of whom they killed four and wounded the fifth, and then escaped taking the scalps of the slain. Mrs. Myers spoke of her sister Mrs. Tuttle, and of her son, Thos. Myers, who was a Sheriff of Luzerne Co. A daughter of Mrs. Myers married the Rev. Dr. Peck, editor of the Methodist Review of New York. Col. Pickering's narrative of his abduction, 1788, says: "At Tunkhannock I found a bundle of clothing sent by your mother, and also an inhabitant of Pittsstown going down the river as far as Lackawanna Creek. And Tuttle, one of the 'boys' said he would go down with us and take his chance. The next morning we three set off in a canoe. Landing the man destined for L. the other went on with me to Wilkesbarre. On the way he told me, he had joined the 'boys' only two or three days before in order to discover who I was, and to get me out of their hands. To this Mr. Miner adds the following note, 'nor was Tuttle recreant to his faith. Deceive your enemy is a maxim of war.' It was important to their safety, that Pickering should be conciliated and warred. The Earls and Tutties, shrewd men, were best able to throw him off his guard, and draw out his opinions and fathom his purposes. There was not one of 'that gang of ruffians' we firmly believe who would not sooner have sacrificed his life than betray his fellows." In Kingston (formerly Wyoming), Luzerne Co., Pa., "Tuttle Creek" indicates a family locality.

63313. Stephen Tuttle, b. Aug. 4, 1772; rem. from Wilkesbarre to Elmira abt. 1811 of which he was the first president. He owned a large farm adjoining the village, which he cultivated and engaged besides in merchandising and milling. He was much respected in the community of Elmira and d. there 1851; m. Mary Ann, dau. of Capt. Wm. McKerachan,* b. Kent, Litchfield, Co., Conn., 1773; d. Almira, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1860, a. 87. She and her sister (Mrs. Alexander) then three weeks old, were rescued from the massacre at Wyoming, by their mother and escaped. They went first to New Milford, Conn., where Mrs. Kerachan m. Mathias Hollenback, and after a considerable time rem. thence to Tioga Point, N. Y.; thence to Elmira, N. Y., about 1811. As long ago as 1795, Miss Kerachan was accustomed to ride on horseback in company with her step-father, Mr. H., from Wilkesbarre to Elmira. Mr. H., traded with the Indians and supplied with rations the council under Col. Pickering, 1791. After m. to Stephen Tuttle she lived at Tioga Point; thence in 1811 to Elmira and next year moved into the house where she lived 50 yrs. and where she d. Rev. David Murdock preached her funeral sermon in which he quotes some of her short and dry sayings. The Am. Year Book for 1861, contains a biog. sketch in which she is described as "a woman of genuine piety, remarkable shrewdness and honesty, and a little blunt withal. She had little faith in windy religionists." An only child, Harriet.

633131. Harriet Tuttle, b. Wilkesbarre, Penn., 1804; educated at Bethlehem, Pa.; d. Dec., 1877; m. 1823. Hon John Arnot of Elmira, who d. 1873.

1. Mary Ann Tuttle Arnot, m. 1875, William Butler Ogden; b. Delaware Co., N. Y., June 15, 1805; d. 1877, at High Bridge, N. Y. City; buried in Woodlawn cemetery. At the age of 16 the death of his father devolved business upon him which caused him to travel much about the country and to visit the large cities. At the age of 18 he became Brigade inspector in the state militia. In 1834 elected to the N. Y. Leg., especially to advocate construction of the N. Y. & E. R. R. In 1835, went to Chicago, Ill., and estab. a land and trust agency, which has developed into one of the institutions of the West. His operations in real estate soon became immense, and the city authorities being too tardy, he laid out and constructed more than 100 miles of streets at his own cost. He built the first swing bridge in Chicago, then never having seen one. He was among the first to introduce the reaping and mowing machines into general use, and at his suggestion the first reaper was sent to the London Exhibition of 1851. The resuscitation and completion of the Ill. and Mich. canal enlisted his untiring efforts. He was the first mayor of Chicago and often elected to the city council. He declined the nom. of his party (dem.) for Congress in 1852. He was the first Pres. of the Rush Med. Col.; Pres. Chicago & Galena U. R. R. Co.; Pres. North Western R. R. Co.; Pres. of the National R. R. Convention at Phila., 1850 to inaugurate measures for the building of the Union Pacific R. R.; Pres. Ill. & Wis. R. R.; Pres. of the Buffalo & Miss. R. R. Co., in Ind. till merged in the Mich. Central; Pres. of the Chicago Branch in Ill.; Pres. of the Board of Com. of Sewerage in Chicago; Pres. of the Chicago, St. Paul and Fond du Lac R. R., which he built largely from his own means. An active director of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago R. R. Co., of which at a period of great difficulty and after repeated declining, the receivership was forced upon him with a salary of $25,000. The high salary, however, he declined. When the Union Pacific R. R. Co. was organized under the act of Congress, he was chosen its first Pres. He was the owner of probably the largest lumbering establishment in the world, at Peshtigo, Wis. Nearly every institution in the Northwest, including the Rush Med. Col.; the Theo. Sem. of the N. W.; the Hist. Soc.; the Academy of Sciences; the Astronomical Soc.; the University of Chicago and the Chicago Woman's Home received from him timely and substantial aid. He has done more than any other one man on this continent for the development of the N. West; and on the ground that he had been foremost and immeasurably ahead of all other men in protecting the public credit and advancing public improvements his name was urged for the democratic nomination for President in 1860. In 1871, time of the great Chicago fire he was in N. Y. city. He hurried back to find his house with the gathered treasures of a life time in ruins. His losses were over a million of dollars. Immediately following this the news came of the destruction of his great mills at Peshigo, including the village. His loss here was over a million and a half of dollars. A fearful loss of life, the burning to death of nearly 600 people accompanied this disaster. The restoration of the business he at once commenced and has completed. In 1866 he purchased a villa and 110 acres of land near High Bridge in the city of N. Y., to which he removed soon after the great fire. The land has a frontage of half a mile on the East River, and is tastefully laid out, and replete with every luxury and convenience. His estate at his decease was valued at abt. five millions. At his funeral, "Bishop Clarkson of Nebraska advancing to the head of the chancel steps, with his hands folded before him, gazed sadly for a moment on the face of the dead." "You will allow me," the Bishop then said, his voice being at first low and tremulous, "to speak a few simple words of him who lies here, one of the noblest and in some senses, the most brilliant man of our land. The great enterprises which he projected, who saw far in advance of his generation, the capabilities of the continent and who might be said to have been the master builder of a city that is the lasting marvel of these days, will be much written of and read; therefore we may pass them with simple mention. But, as we are about the coffin of him we revered, we may speak of these superior graces of character that made him so attractive to all, and truly loved by those near him; that charming courtesy that was inborn in him; that loving consideration for others that was prominent in his life; that sterling cheerfulness; that outstretched hand and ready help for every one that was unfortunate or distressed; that overflowing love for whatever was noblest in man, and that wise and patient council for hundreds that went to him in their perplexity. All this made him as practical a benefactor as the city, the railroad or the other material developments that he helped to assured existence. It is not often that a man has been in this life three score and ten years, and has left so many people that he has helped, lifted up and inspired as Mr. Ogden has. The announcement of his death will fill with sorrow hundreds that we know not of, and I am sure that in the many months that death has been watchful and tireless about the citadel of his life 'God bless you' ascended many hundred times. The same grateful affection that has brought me half way across the continent to lay my simple tribute upon his coffin, is felt by others and is a noble crown of his life. I knew him when he was foremost in the most active enterprises; when science and learning considered him their most generous patron. When the state recognized him as her wisest son; when the church regarded him as her constant helper, when he was everybody's constant friend and adviser, and when though burdened with great cares, he was ever genial, honest, high-toned, true-hearted and light-souled. God be praised, that, now and then, here and there, such a man lives among us to help us by his example. Although Mr. Ogden was always a theoretical believer in christianity and a generous supporter of its institutions, yet it was not until late in life that he openly acknowledged his allegiance to the God who made him and the Savior who redeemed him. It would have been better, perhaps, if the whole of such a life had been spent as a child of Christ. What unlimited personal and national benefits might have resulted from his vast personal influence and amazing power, guided by the spirit of practical christianity. But it is well that he came in childlike faith and patience to the foot of the cross."

*Wm. McKerachan came from Ireland to America in 1764, and taught school in Penn. and New Jersey. In 1774 he was attracted to Wyoming by the romance of the contest. He settled in Hanover township, where he taught school, opened a store and bought lands. He was versed in mathematics, navigation and surveying, and among his papers were found stanzas of poetry supposed to be original with him. He was a magistrate and one of the judges of the County Court of Westmoreland, appointed by Gov. Trumbull of Conn., and Capt. of the Hanover militia company who took part in the battle of Wyoming. On the morning of that dreadful day, he said to his Lieut. Lazarus Stewart: "My pursuits have been those of peace; you have been reared to war, and accustomed to command. On parade I can manage my men, but in the field no unnecessary hazard should be run; a mistake might prove fatal. Take you the lead, and I will fight under you with my men as an aid or as a private in the ranks. Your presence at the head of the Hanover boys will inspire confidence." So it was arranged and they fell together. He wastall, had a fine person, an alert step a cheerful disposition, and an expressive and pleasant countenance. "Farewell, to the brave, the generous, the true-hearted Irishman; gentle sleep and a happy resurrection to his manly spirit, who in the midst of gathering honors and accumulating property, laid down his life for Wyoming."—Chas. Miner's Hist. of Wyoming.

†The name on the original record is obscure. My opinion from the first has been that it was Tuttle, but might easily be mistaken for Tolle. It is written Tuttle, with but one small t, and that with so faint an indication of a cross that it might be taken for an l; and the u is so imperfectly formed that it might be taken for an o, making the word Tolle. Hon. L. M. Bottwood examined it, and at first thought it was Tolle, but afterwards changed his mind and believed it to be Tuttle. Rev. Dr. John E. Todd also examined the original record and thought it was Tolle, but at a later date he writes: "Since your letter I have re-examined the town record, and am pretty well satisfied that you are right in reading the name Tuttle, and not Tolle, with reference to Susanna, the wf. of Samuel Todd." Still I should not have felt satisfied to occupy the pages of this work with a record of Deacon Samuel Todd's descendants on so uncertain a foundation. Other circumstances, however, whose significance would be better understood by the genealogist than by the general reader, indicate very decidedly the verity of my conclusion, such as propinquity of place, the numerous Todd-Tuttle inter-marriages. His bro. Jonah Todd m. Hannah Clark [1]; his bro. Daniel m. Desire Tuttle [1]; his s. Christopher m. Hannah Tuttle [4]; his dau. Susanna m. Caleb Humiston [1]. The will of Noah Pangborn devises land to Rev. Samuel Todd, who would be his first cous. on this theory, and makes Rev. Benjamin Doolittle (whose wf. Lydia would be his first cous.) an execr. of his will, etc.

*This compilation of descendants of Sarah (Tuttle) Slauson, is made up to a considerable extent from Rev. E. B. Huntington's Hist. of Stamford and Registration; a very careful and accurate writer. The first and second generations are doubtless entirely correct, and the third probably so. Beyond the third there are elements of uncertainty, and it is very likely some errors, which would not have existed had I been able to devote more time to the examination of land, probate and church records of Fairfield Co. This caution, however, does not apply to the record of descendants of Hannah Slauson [714] which was kindly corrected and extended by Charles W. Holly, Esq., of Stamford for the compiler.

Among their most precious treasures was a quarto Bible, printed in London in 1763, which had been given to Miss Holly when five years of age, for her proficiency in reading one of the chapters of the Chronicles filled with Scripture names. When unearthed it was found in good condition excepting the heavy metal clasps were rusted off. The Bible remained with her dau., Mrs. Abigail H. Seeley, till her death.—Hist. of Stamford, p. 213.

II. Alfred Bishop, b. Dec. 21, 1798. At an early age commenced his "self-reliant career" as a teacher of a public school in Stamford. In a short time went to New Jersey with the purpose of farming. While thus employed he made experiments with pick ax, shovel and wheelbarrow to determine accurately the cost of removing earth to different distances, by which he prepared himself as a contractor. He was engaged on the Morris Canal, N. J., the great bridge over the Rariton river a New Brunswick, the Hoosatic, Berkshire, Washington and Saratoga, Naugatuck and the New York & New Haven railroads.

He removed, 1834, from N. J. to Bridgeport, Conn., where he spent the rest of his life. "It is not claiming too much for him to say that the flourishing city owes much to his enterprise and public spirit. He readily inspired confidence in his plans for public improvements, and at his call the largest sums were cheerfully supplied."

But in the very midst of his extensive operations, and while forming plans for still greater works, he was suddenly arrested by his last sickness. From the first he felt that it would prove fatal; and now still more than while in health, he displayed his remarkable talent in arranging and planning all the details of a complicated operation. In the midst of great physical suffering he detailed with minuteness the necessary steps for closing up all his business arrangements, laying out the work for his executors as he would plan the details of an ordinary contract for a railroad. He then, in the same business-like manner, distributed his large estate. One-quarter of it he disposed of in gratuities outside of his own family, partly to his more distant relatives, partly to his personal friends who had been unfortunate, and partly to strictly benevolent uses. His pastor was remembered with an hundred dollars annuity; the American Bible Society received $10,000, and the Female Benevolent Society of Bridgeport, $5,000. After thus distributing one-fourth of his estate, the balance went to his wife and children.

He m. Mary, dau. of Ethan Ferris of Greenwich, and had 3 sons, all b. in Bloomfield, N. J. 1, ETHAN FERRIS, Y. C., and took master's degree at Trinity; took orders in the Epis. chl., and has had charge of a parish in Bridgeport, Conn., where he established St. Luke's College for the education of orphans and destitute boys. 2, WILLIAM DARIUS, b. Sept. 14, 1827; he had a strong natural liking for mechanics and science; Y. C. 1849; stud. law, but on death of his f., of whose est. he was one of the execs., his entire attention was given to railroad interests. He was for many yrs. Pres. of the N. Y. & N. Hav. R. R. In 1857 he was chosen Rep. of his Con. dist., receiving more than 3,000 votes above that of the Pres. candidate of the same party; while in Con. appt. chairman of Com. on Manufactures, and was prominent and popular as a speaker and debater. On the resignation of the Hon. Joseph Holt (afterw. Postmaster Gen.) as U. S. Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Bishop was appointed to that office. As a mem. of the Conn. Leg., to which he has been several times elected, his influence has been felt in the railroad legislation of the state. Of late years ill health has compelled him to relinquish public employments. 3, HENRY, Trinity Col., Hartf.; res. Bridgeport.

†Enos Weed, s. of Enos and supposed brother of Stephen, was one of the most erratic characters that Stamford has produced. He was literally an original. Thinking independently of book, and without regard to customary opinions or usages. In medicine he became noted as an adviser and practitioner in his own way. He constructed a spelling book with many novelties, both in alphabet and in the orthography. He became a preacher whom the Orthodox could not wholly endorse, nor yet condemn. With all his eccentricity he was counted worthy in 1790 of being appointed leader of the first Methodist class established in Stamford, and he was authorized local preacher of that denomination. Mr. Huntington gives a specimen of his genius (p. 420) found in an old newspaper to which he sometimes contributed:

"My name is Enos Weed, and junior too,
Which is something more,
It shows that Weeds have grown before."

82. Timothy Edwards, b. May 14, 1669. Some remarkable providences are related of his early years. When a little child he fell into a tub of water and was taken out almost dead by a person passing. When a school boy he came near killing John Hunter by pointing a loaded gun at him; the gun flashed in the pan. Once he fell from a cherry tree and came near breaking his neck. Once he came near going under the ice while skating. At another time he swallowed a peach stone, which would have killed him had it not been forced up by natural causes. It was evidently his destiny to survive.

He fitted for college under Rev. Pelatiah Glover, minister at Springfield, Mass., an accomplished scholar, and entered Harvard, 1687, where he pursued the usual course of four years study receiving, July 4, 1691, two degrees, A. B. in the forenoon and A. M. in the afternoon; an uncommon mark of respect. Having pursued the usual course of study he was licensed to preach in May, 1694; and after preaching awhile as a candidate, was ordained 1698 pastor of the newly consecrated church at East Windsor, Conn. In the autumn of the same year, Nov. 6, 1694, he m. Esther, 2d child of Rev. Solomon Stoddard of Northampton, Mass. [App.]

In the spring of 1709 Mr. Edwards and Rev. Mr. Buckingham of Milford were appointed by the Colonial Leg. of Conn. Chaplains of the Conn troops for the expedition against Canada. He left Windsor for New Haven in July and reached Albany, Aug. 15th, with three companies under Col. Livingston. The march to Albany was attended with considerable exposure. The country was uncleared and he camped out two nights in the woods. On the 20th of Aug. he left Albany and marched for Wood Creek. At Saratoga, in consequence of fatigue and exposure, he was taken seriously ill. On the 14 of Sept., being unable to proceed, he was conveyed in a boat to Stillwater and thence carried back through the woods in a wagon and on a bed. Owing to the lateness of the season and other causes, the expedition was soon after relinquished, and Mr. Edwards in a few weeks returned home to Albany.

In the summer of 1752, finding the infirmities of age increasing upon him, he proposed the settlement of a colleague, and Rev. Joseph Perry was accordingly settled June 11, 1755. The salary of Mr. Edwards was continued until his death, which took place Jan. 27, 1758, in the 89th year of his age and 60th of his ministry. Mrs. Edwards survived him 12 years, and her husband's salary and the affections of his flock were continued to her until her death. She d. Jan. 19, 1770, in the 99th year of her age, retaining her mental powers to the last. They lived together in the married state upwards of 62 years. Mr. Edwards was universally esteemed and beloved as an upright, pious and exemplary man, and a faithful and very efficient minister of the Gospel.

Dr. Sereno E. Dwight in his biog. sketch says: "Rev. Timothy Edwards was five feet ten inches high, fair complexion, strong, robust frame, full but not corpulent, of polished manners, particularly attentive to dress and propriety of exterior; never appearing in public but in the full dress of a clergyman. On a visit to E. Windsor in the summer of 1823, I found a considerable number of persons advanced in years who had been well acquainted with Mrs. Edwards, and two, upwards of ninety, who had been pupils of her husband. Mr. E. was well acquainted with Hebrew literature, and was regarded as a man of more than usual learning; but was particularly distinguished for his accurate knowledge of the Greek and Roman Classics. He annually prepared a number of youths for college, there being at that time no public schools or academies endowed for the purpose. One of my aged informants who pursued his preparatory studies under him told me that on his admission into college, when the officers learned with whom he had studied, they remarked to him that there was no need of examining Mr. Edwards' scholars. He was, for that period, remarkably liberal and enlightened with regard to the education of his children, preparing not only his son, but each of his daughters also for college. On the Canada Expedition, he writes, in a letter dated Aug. 3, 1711, that Jonathan and the girls may continue their study of Latin; another letter, dated Aug. 7, that Jonathan may continue to recite his Latin to his elder sisters. When his daughters were of proper age he sent them to Boston to finish their education. All of his children became hopefully pious in their youth.

He always preached extemporaneously, and, until he was upwards of seventy, without noting down the heads of his discourses. After that time he commonly wrote the divisions on small slips of paper, which, as they appeared beyond the leaves of the Bible that he held in his hand, his parishioners called "Mr. Edwards' thinking page 4." Apologizing for this one day to one of his parishioners, he remarked that he found his memory beginning to fail, but he thought his judgment as sound as ever; and so thought his people till near the close of his life. He was not known, it was said, to have written out but one sermon, that which he preached at the general election in 1732, and published; but Dr. Dwight saw a number of Mr. Edwards' sermons. They were written in a small, clear and beautiful hand. Within a few years a large number of his papers have been found, stowed away in some long forgotten repository. The election sermon is a solemn and faithful application of the doctrine of a general judgment to his hearers, particularly as legislators and magistrates. His son often visited his father and preached in his desk. It was commonly remarked that though Mr. Edwards was perhaps the most learned man, yet Mr. Jonathan was the deeper preacher. His influence over his congregation was commanding, and ever steadily exercised on the side of truth and righteousness. When he knew of any division among his people he went immediately to see that the parties were reconciled; and when he heard of any improper conduct, his custom was to go immediately and reprove them. Under his preaching the gospel was efficacious and revivals frequent. His son observed in 1737, that he had known of no parish in the west of New England, except Northampton, which so often had revivals of religion as his father's.

The general high character of the people of his parish and of their descendants, became noted, and genealogists and local historians have not failed to observe and to acknowledge the workings of some powerful influence as its primary cause. That influence may undoubtedly be traced to its faithful first pastor. At the time of his settlement at E. W. his father built for him a house on a farm of moderate extent which he had bought. It was then considered a handsome residence. "I saw it," says Dr. Dwight, "in 1803, a substantial house of moderate dimensions; had one chimney in the middle, and was entered like all the houses of that period, by stepping over the sill. In this house they lived and died and all their children were born. A step-stone that belonged to it is inserted in the foundation of the Theological Institute of Conn., at E. Windsor.

8212. Samuel Hopkins, bap. Oct. 31, 1729; Y. C. 1749; tutor 1751-5; pastor chh. in Hadley, Mass. (1755-1809), 54 yrs. Struck with paralysis, Feb. 1809, which impaired his mental faculties, and d. March 8, 1811. He was economical and a good manager. Though very facetious among his friends, his manner abroad was so dignified as to inspire the children with awe. His pulpit delivery was slow and languid, requiring a laborious attention on the part of his hearers, but the matter of his discourse was usually sound, wise and practical. In his day the whole town formed but one congregation; and it was no small part of the minister's duty to keep out the sects or so called "interlopers." In this matter he had rare sagacity. His social qualities were of the highest order, and he was an attractive companion in all companies. One of the stories he used to tell was this: Visiting an invalid he said, "It is a long time since you have been able to attend meeting, would you not like to have the neighbors called in and have me preach a lecture at your house?" The sick man replied: "I should like it much, for I have not been able to get any sleep for a long time, and I know from much experience that your preaching will give me essential aid in this respect." He published two discourses on the "Church Membership of Infants," 1799, and a half century sermon, 1805.—Judd's Hist. of Hadley, p. 334. D. D., Y. C. 1802; m. 1756, Sarah (wid. of Rev. University of Vt., 1815-21; pastor at Newport, R. I., 1822-26. Bodily infirmity and depression of spirit, intensified by the death of his adopted son, John W. Hubbard (s. of Roswell), the separation of the family, the cares and burdens of unaccustomed business (as administrator of an estate), at length broke down his mental energies. Occasional aberrations of mind ended in deep religious melancholy, gloom and despair. He d. in a fit of apoplexy, at the home of his nephew, Rev. S. H. Riddel, in Glastonbury, Conn., Dec. 4, 1830, a. 71. A published fast day sermon, preached in 1812, bears this imprint on the title page: "Published for the press by desire of some who heard it and liked it; by some who heard it and did not like it, and by the desire of others who did not hear it, but imagine they should not have liked it if they had." He was of commanding stature. Though of an austere and severe countenance, his feelings were ardent, and his susceptibility to external influences acute. His pulpit delivery was animated and vehement, rising at times to strains of lofty and powerful eloquence. He was an industrious and voluminous author, and published a large number of sermons, addresses, orations and A Dissertation on Christian Theology. In 1808 he collected and published the first complete and accurate edition of the works of Jonathan Edwards. He was one of the founders of the Mass. Miss. Soc. Active in originating the General Assembly of Mass. Member of the A. B. C. F. M. He was admitted to the bar in Dec., 1808, and began practice but was induced soon after to study theology. This great change he attributed in after years mainly to a striking sermon of the Rev. John M. Mason from the text "To the poor the gospel is preached." He studied a year at Andover and was licensed to preach in the fall of 1809, and in Aug., 1810, was called to the Brick Presb. chh. in N. York city, where he remained during his life, unmoved by invitations to the presidency of Hamilton Col. and to that of Dartmouth. John and Martha (Gould) Davenport of Stamford, Conn., and g. s. of Rev. John D., the first minister at New Haven, b. 1715; Y. C. 1732; d. 1789; Col. of Mil.; one of the Council of State; Judge of the Fairfield Co. Court; Dea. Cong. chh. 1759 to 1789. Of his presence of mind Pres. Dwight relates a remarkable instance: "The 19th of May, 1780, was a very dark day; candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent and disappeared and the fowls went to roost. The Legislature of Conn. was then in session at Hartford. A very general opinion prevailed that the day of judgment was at hand. The House of Representatives being unable to transact their business adjourned. A proposal to adjourn the council was under consideration. When the opinion of Col. Davenport was asked he answered: "I am against an adjournment. The day of judgment is either approaching or it is not; if it is not, there is no cause for adjournment; if it is I choose to be found doing my duty. I wish, therefore, that candles may be brought." The following lines in relation to this event, from John G. Whittier's Tent on the Beach, we trust we shall be pardoned for inserting here:

ABRAHAM DAVENPORT.

In the old days (a custom laid aside
With breeches and cocked hats) the people sent
Their wisest men to make the public laws.
And so, from a brown homestead, where the Sound
Drinks the small tribute of the Miamas,
Waved over by the woods of Rippowams,
And hallowed by pure lives and tranquil deaths,
Stamford sent up to the councils of the State
Wisdom and grace in Abraham Davenport.

"Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In day of which the Norland sagas tell—
The twilight of the Gods. The low hung sky
Was black with ominous clouds, save where its rim
Was fringed with a dull glow, like that which climbs
The crater's sides from the red hell below.
Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Low'd, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Fluited abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom-blast of the trumpet shatter
The blacksky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as he looked
A loving guest of Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable Law.

Meanwhile, in the old State House, dim as ghosts,
Sat the law-givers of Connecticut,
Trembling beneath their legislative robes.
"It is the Lord's Great Day! Let us adjourn,"
Some said; and then, as if with one accord,
All eyes were turned to Abraham Davenport
He rose, slowly cleaving with his steady voice
The intolerable hush. "This well may be
The Day of Judgment which the world awaits;
But be it so or not, I only know
My present duty and my Lord's command,
To occupy till he come. So at the post

Where He hath set me in His Providence,
I choose, for one, to meet Him face to face—
No faithless servant frightened from my task,
But ready when the Lord of the harvest calls;
And, therefore, with all reverence, I would say,
Let God do his work, we will see to ours.
Bring in the candles." And they brought them in.

Then by the flaring lights the Speaker read,
Albeit with husky voice and shaking hands,
An act to amend an act to regulate
The shad and alewife fisheries. Whereupon,
Wisely and well spake Abraham Davenport,
Straight to the question, with no figures of speech Save the nine Arab signs, yet not without
The shrewd dry humor natural to the man;
His awe-struck colleagues listening all the while,
Between the pauses of his argument,
To hear the thunder of the wrath of God
Break from the hollow trumpet of the cloud.

And there he stands in memory to this day,
Erect, self-poised, a rugged face, half seen
Against the background of unnatural dark,
A witness to the ages as they pass,
That simple duty hath no place for fear.

Another instance took place at Danbury at the Court of Common Pleas, of which he was Chief Justice. "This venerable man, after he was struck with death, heard a considerable part of a trial; gave the charge to the jury and took notice of an article in the testimony which had escaped the attention of the counsel on both sides. He then retired from the bench and was soon after found dead in his bed."—For portrait see Hist. of Stamford, Conn. He m. (2) Aug. 8, 1776, Martha Coggsall, wid. of Perez Fitch and mother of Wm. (grave-stone in Grove st. cemetery in N. Hav.) Of whom, says Horace Bushnell, "whose simple dignity and beauty all her own." m. Charles W. Apthorpe, Esq., of Boston.

I. Mary Mehitable Apthorpe, m. in N. Hav., Sept. 13, 1833, Rev. Horace Bushnell. In dedication of his book on women suffrage Dr. Bushnell pays the following tribute to his wife: "The good and wise mother, the notable housewife and care taker, the discreet adviser and patient manager of wayward boyhood."—Biog. And again he says: "For once I will dare to break open one of the customary seals of silence by inscribing this little book (Woman Suffrage) to the woman I know best and most thoroughly; having been overlapped, as it were, and curtailed in the same consciousness for the last thirty-six years. If she is offended that I do it without her consent, I hope she may get over the offense shortly as she has a great many other things that are worse. She has been with me in many weaknesses and some storms, giving strength alike in both; sharp enough to see my faults, faithful enough to expose them, and considerate enough to do it wisely, shrinking never from loss or blame or shame to be encountered in anything right to be done, adding great and high instigations,—instigations always to good, and never to evil mistaken for good,—forecasting always things bravest and best to be done, and supplying inspirations enough to have made a hero if they had not lacked the timber. If I have done anything well, she has been the more really in it, that she did not know it; and the more willingly, also, that having her part known has not occurred to her; compelling me thus to honor, not less, but more, the covert glory of the womanly nature, even as I obtain a distincter and more wondering admiration of the divine meaning and moistenings, and countless unbought ministries it contributes to this otherwise very dry world."—Biog., p. 503. Horace Bushnell was b. at Bantam, near Litchfield, Conn., April 14, 1802; son of Ensign and Dotha (Bishop) Bushnell; rem. with his parents to New Preston, Conn., 1805; Y. C. 1827; taught acad. in Norwich, Conn., two yrs.; tutor, Y. C., on the Principles of National Greatness; Christian Nurture, 1847; God in Christ, with Preliminary Dissertation on Language as related to Thought, 1849. For this publication he was called to answer a charge of heresy before the Clerical Association, of which he was a member; charge not sustained; Christ in Theology, 1851; Sermon for the New Life, 1858; Nature and the Supernatural, 1858; Work and Play, 1864; The Vicarious Sacrifice, 1865; Moral Uses of Dark Things, 1868; Woman's Suffrage, the Reform against Nature, 1869. He also published many addresses, and a frequent contributor to religious periodicals. He was active in securing the beautiful ground in Hartford, named for him—Bushnell Park—on which the new State Capitol is erected; S. T. D., Wesleyan Col. 1842; Harv. 1852; LL.D. 1871; invited to the Presidency of Middlebury Col. 1840. He d. in Hartf., Feb. 17, 1876. On Sunday, Nov. 24, 1878, a mural tablet memorial in the Park chh., was unveiled after an appropriate sermon by his successor, Rev. Dr. Burton. His life, written by his daughter, Mary, pub. by Harpers, 1880, contains two portraits, one in early, the other in later years. "His mental poise was finely adjusted, but for that very reason, perhaps, the more easily disturbed. In later years even the slight fever that accompanies a cold would sometimes set his mind wandering.—Biog., p. 46. 1, ELIZABETH, d. y. 2, HORACE, b. Sept., 1838; d. Oct. 9, 1842, of brain disease. In Nov., 1842, Mrs. Clarke took passage on a steamer from Detroit to Buffalo, the last boat of the season, with her two daughters, Mary, a dark-eyed, curly-haired girl of 6 yrs., and Charlotte, a gentle, womanly girl of 12. They were returning to New England. The weather was calm and pleasant. At midnight the boat stopped at a pier built far out into the lake, to take on some freight; among the rest a barrel of turpentine. In rolling this barrel on board it burst; the turpentine ran over the deck, down among the machinery, reached the furnace and set the boat on fire. The lighthouse on the pier caught; the boat was cast loose, and drifted away, and most of the crew and passengers perished. Some were chilled to death; some were burned with the vessel; many were drowned. A few were saved by life-preservers and floating fragments of furniture. Several years afterwards Grace Greenwood, who had learned the facts by correspondence with her cousin, wrote the story for a child's paper, The Little Pilgrim, under the title of "Heroism and Faith." It is a beautiful and touching recital of maternal love and womanly courage and filial faith. Only an abstract can be given here:

While Mrs. Clarke was sleeping soundly in her berth, on the night of the disaster, a little white-robed figure came to her, and said quite gently: "Mamma, the boat is on fire. Do get up!"

It was little Mary. The mother was tired and failed perhaps to comprehend. Then anxiously grasping her mother's hand she spoke again: "Mamma, Mamma, we are burning up! What shall we do?"

Then Mrs. Clarke sprang up, and saw her children by her side, pale with terror, but each careful little soul holding in her arms the clothes she had taken off on going to bed. All the passengers had fled from the cabin. On opening the door, it was seen to be filled with smoke. Another door opened from her room into a passage that led to the stern of the boat. She led her children along this passage. They were all in their night clothes. It was a cold November night. For a little while they stood in a narrow space, the flames behind, the chilly water before them; death on either hand. Then the soul of the mother fully awoke. The water were lit up with a ghastly day. Looking about for means of escape, she saw under the stern of the vessel the rudder chain and ropes. It seemed to afford a chance. She seized it and formed her plans.

"Children," said she calmly, "do not cling to me; be quiet and obedient, or I cannot help you." The brave little girls promised to be very good. Then the mother stood with her arms about her darlings and prayed, a low, brief prayer, but strong as love, passionate as life, solemn as death. Then lifting up little Mary, she said: "My child do you see those ropes and chains below there?"

"Yes, mamma."

"Well, darling, I must drop you over into the water. You will go down, down; but you will soon come up very near those chains and ropes I think. Then grasp the chains—not the ropes. Hold on to the chains. Don't let go for a moment. Do you understand?"

"Yes, mamma; I am to hold on to those chains. But won't I be drowned?"

"I hope not dear; only keep your mouth tightly closed while under water; be calm, and remember what mamma has told you. Now, dear, you must go."

Over the railing the mother gently lifted her child. It was fifteen feet to the water. One fearful instant she held her suspended and then let go. The child struck the water almost as silently and softly as a snow flake. The white dress gleamed for a minute, then sunk out of sight.

How long it seemed waiting for her. "Oh, mother," said Charlotte, "Mary is gone!" But she had hardly spoken before a little white speck appeared in the water. It was Mary rising where she had sank. She grasped the chain. She replied to their call. She was safe.

"Now, Charlotte," said the mother, "it is your turn. I cannot lift you over the railing; you must jump. Be as brave as little Mary; do as she did and you may be saved."

"Yes, mother, I will try. But will you surely come?"

"Yes, my daughter, I will die or be saved with my children. Keep a good heart—trust in God—good bye."

A hurried embrace, a loving kiss, then a slender young figure clambered over the railing, stood poised an instant outside, then plunged into the cold, deep water. Another fearful suspense; then this dear form arose also from the relenting deep, grasped the rudder chain, and called to her mother that she was safe.

It was time for the mother to go. The flames had reached the spot where she stood. She climbed over the railing and leaped. She seemed to go down a great distance into profound calm and silence, shutting out, as it seemed forever, the scene of anguish, terror and tumult above. But at last she also began to rise, as if borne by angels, and came up close to her children. Oh! what a welcome they gave her. She grasped the chain, but the iron was almost too hot to hold. The flames above blinded and scorched them, the hot iron became intolerable. Once little Mary let go and went under, but was rescued by the mother, encouraged and entreated to hold on. "Oh, yes," sobbed the child, "what will poor father do if we are drowned?"

So love, the great divine helper, lent her patience and courage.

At length, after an hour of untold suffering, half burned, half chilled to death, they were picked up by a small boat, the very last to be rescued.

He served two yrs. in Rev. army, and nearly lost his life by exposure; prac. in Lanesboro, Mass., 18 yrs.; rem. to Pompey, N. Y., 1805. His reputation as a surgeon very extensive. His skill shown rather in preserving than amputating. Many instances are related of his success without the knife, in opposition to medical councils. In the winter of 1813-14, out of 300 cases of spotted fever only 3 died. One reason of his success was his untiring devotion to his patients. In one instance he was taken on a bed to the Jerome fam., of whom 3 were down with the fever. It was a stormy, winter night on Pompey Hill, and the distance was five miles. They all recovered. His mind failed in later yrs., and after he had ceased to know his own family he cured a difficult case of disease—the faith of the patient in him, aided. He d. at Pompey March 4, 1826; m. In March formed a co-partnership with Caleb B. Drake, Esq., of Ithica, N. Y., and d. there Feb. 19, 1817, unm. He had acquired a high reputation, both for ability and moral worth. In 1822 he "went West" to Olean Point, where he bought a skiff, and with a companion went down the Alleghany river to Warren, where they engaged passage on a raft and continued the voyage on raft and flat boat to Steubenville, O., thence by boat to Maysville, thence on foot to Millersville, Ky., where he obtained a school, and res. till 1828.

He experienced religion and joined the Presb. chh. in Concord, Ky. In 1828 he returned to Pompey, N. Y., on horseback and alone—a distance of 700 miles—and engaged in farming and teaching till 1832; then till 1837 in mercantile business at Manlius, N. Y., and for 3 yrs. was Deputy Co. Clerk; rem. to Syracuse. In 1829 elected School Commissioner for Pompey. In 1841 Village Clerk of S., and collector of taxes. He has been in the marble business, also in hardware and in sash and blind making. From 1855 for 7 yrs. a mem. of the city board of assessors. He has been chief clerk in office of county clerk of Onondaga Co., searching department, and at intervals appt. by the courts to settle several large estates. In 1866 he purchased the res. known as "Hiawatha Lodge," abt. 2½ miles south of Syracuse, and lives there. His res. in Ky. had enabled him to see from personal observation the evils of slavery, and he became a radical in opposition to that system. He was a candidate of the Liberty party for Co. Clerk in 1846. He was the main instigator and most prominent actor in the abduction of "White Lady Fugitive," Oct. 7, 1839, from her master while visiting Syracuse. This caused great excitement at the time, and a full account was published in several journals. He thus initiated the "Underground R. R." in S.; was a mem. of the vigilance committee, and active in the later proceedings of the celebrated "Jerry" rescue case. Though nearly 84 yrs. of age, he still retains most of his faculties to a remarkable degree. Since 1824 he has eschewed tobacco and strong drink. He m. June 7, 1836, Clara Catlin Tyler, b. One who has long known Miss Clarke renders the following deserved tribute: "She is a person of many choice qualities: an easy writer, an earnest worker, mentally and physically very energetic, systematic and correct in whatever work she undertakes. She graduated from the Syracuse High School and fitted herself for a teacher of music, drawing and painting. For a year she was a teacher in the public schools of Syracuse, but failing health frustrated her cherished plans, and she was compelled to abandon her life's work for the more listless occupations of an invalid. She was for years a constant sufferer, but has regained in a small degree some of her former physical vigor. She resides with her parents at Hiawatha Lodge, near Syracuse. She is unm."

He was subject to fits in childhood up to about the age of eight yrs., and everafter was unable to pursue any regular course of business or study. The wish of his life was a college education. He stud. at Pompey Acad. at intervals, as health permitted. He also stud. at Oneida Institute at Whitesville, N. Y., where manual labor is connected with study, and was some time employed as an assistant teacher. Theodore D. Weld, who was a teacher and lecturer there, said he had a happy faculty of illustrating and conveying his ideas to his class. He afterward stud. med. and surg. with Dr. Stearns of Pompey, who said he was the most rapid and thorough student he ever knew; but after six mos. was obliged to give it up. Previously he had stud. law with the same result. After 1831-2 he was on the wing for several years, lecturing, teaching and resting. Afterward res. on a farm at Baldwinsville, N. Y., until a year before his death. He d. at Syracuse, Oct. 26, 1856. H. D. Weld who was greatly attached to him, said he was misunderstood by most people. He had "a great, true heart; a far, clear-seeing eye; profound views of men and things; loathing of shams; infelicitous circumstances ruffled his surface, but how beautiful, serene and transparent lay the depths of his nature * * * Rest, brother of my heart, weary, sick at heart, reaching forth with yearning and agony to the things before, thou hast attained at last." He was frequently solicited to furnish copies of his writings both in prose and poetry for publication, but absolutely refused. He read and criticized the profoundest writings as one at home, but in later years never wrote. All moral and religious questions greatly interested him.

Went with his father to Fayetteville in 1832, thence to Gaines; thence to Coldwater, Mich. Taught school and stud. law; admitted to bar 1842. In 1844 appt. by Gov. Fitch, Pros. Pierce to the Chippewas of Lake Superior and Upper Miss., with stores at Sault St. Marie, L'Anse, at head of Keweenaw Bay and La Point, an island in Lake Superior. He adopted a humane policy, prohibited the sale of whisky to the Indians as far as possible, and destroyed it wherever found within his agency. In this the Indians concurred. In 1854, in connection with another agent, he concluded a treaty at La Point with the Chippewas of L. S. and U. M., by which a large tract was ceded to the U. S. After the close of his agency he resumed professional and other business.

On the 15th day of Sept., 1862, the 19th Regt., Mich. Vols. was mustered into the service of the U. S. at Dowagiac, Mich., under the command of Col. Henry Clarke Gilbert. The Regt. left ten days after for the rendezvous on the Ohio river, 10 miles below Cincinnati; thence ordered from place to place. At Nicholasville, Tenn., a battery of 6 mounted howitzers and 40 horses was attached to the Regt. At Thompson's Station, Tenn., the Union force of 1700 men, including Col. Gilbert's Regt., was captured by a force of 1600 men under Gen. Forrest. The 19th Mich., who went into battle with 488 men, lost 20 killed and 83 wounded, of whom 54 died; 100 more were disabled by exposure and cruel treatment while prisoners. Col. Gilbert says that the men were literally slaughtered while on the march to Richmond as prisoners. The officers were confined in Libby prison from March 20 to May 5, 1863, and then exchanged. The Regt. was reorganized at Camp Chase, and in Oct. Col. Gilbert was sent to McMinnville in command of the Post, and while there built several redoubts. In April, 1864, he was ordered to the front and was at the storming of Resaca on the 15th of May, where his command captured a battery on the third attempt, the two first being unsuccessful. At this time he was shot through the body, within 15 feet of the enemy's guns, by a ball from a rifle in the hands of a sharpshooter. He dismounted without assistance, tied his horse to a grub and sat down. He was taken in an ambulance to Chattanooga and d. there, May 24, 1864, nine days after the battle. X. Sara Jane, b. Pompey, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1823. From the age of 12 to 19 she attended school at Rochester, N. Y., and when about 15 began to write for the Rochester papers, articles which they were glad to get. For the next few years she wrote under the nom de plume of "Grace Greenwood," for Whittier, Willis, Morris, Neal's Gazette or Godey, and was considered the most brilliant and copious lady correspondent of that day. In 1850 many of her sketches and letters of this period were collected and published by Ticknor & Fields, under the title of "Greenwood Leaves." The Poems were published about the same time. About 1853 she spent a year in Europe, and wrote letters home, which immediately on her return were collected and published with the title Haps and Mishaps in Europe. Since her m. she has edited The Little Pilgrim, a juvenile weekly, from which and from her other writings for the young, selections have been published by Ticknor & Fields to the extent of about a dozen vols. She was an early contributor to the Independent and during the war a lecturer to soldiers and at sanitary fairs, and also a general lecturer. In a letter to her cousin, Miss F. Amelia Clarke, G. G. says: "It is not my nature to dabble in anything. I must be in all over if at all." [See App.] A correspondent of the Washington Press in 1874 describes her as follows: "At the last Saturday evening 'reunion,' Grace Greenwood in her inimitable way, gave us dramatic readings in costume. Her personations exceeded anything the writer has seen on the stage or in private life. Charlotte Cushman, Fanny Kemble, Scott Siddons, last but not least, our own Grace Greenwood, make all the stars of the first magnitude that we have now in this particular heaven of genius. Attorney-Gen. Williams says 'that he looks upon Grace Greenwood as the best writer and the most gifted woman in the country.' This decision is legal and may be considered final. Years ago the great and good Horace Mann said that she was not only 'the most gifted, but that she was the most beautiful woman he had ever seen;' and his passion for her in youthful days was as pure as though she had been a disembodied spirit. It is so rare that beauty and genius are wedded to one soul. In the opinion of the writer, Grace Greenwood is a handsomer woman at fifty than in the 'long ago.' It is the difference between the budding green of April and the garnered glory of September. If her portrait was taken as she stands before us to-day and hung in the Corcoran gallery, the spectator would say 'this must be a Roman matron who lived before the pall of the Middle Ages darkened the earth.' How does she look?—a brunette of the purest type, with clear-cut features, sorrowful, inquiring eyes, that shine as though a quenchless flame burned somewhere in the solitude of her own soul. There are some pictures which are burned into the human mind. We shall never forget her personation of 'Over the Hills to the Poorhouse,' one of Carleton's poems. The poverty-stricken outfit, the worn carpet bag, the iron-bowed spectacles, the gray hair. From the highest to the humblest of that goodly company scarce a dry eye was to be seen. Then she told us what Miss Tattle, from Buttonville, saw at a 'Rejective Session of the Senate.' This was followed by that which proves man to have been the only 'created laughing animal;'" m. at New Brighton, Pa., Oct. 17, 1853, Leander K. Lippincott of Washington, D. 825. Jonathan Edwards, b. Oct. 5, 1703. Being an only son was named by his father "the gift of the Lord." When but six yrs. of age he began to learn Latin under his father and elder sisters, all of whom the father had made proficient in that language, and he was carefully instructed at home until he was thirteen years of age. His letters and essays written at a very early period display a remarkable inquisitiveness and acuteness of mind, both as to mental and natural phenomena. A fragment written when he was not more than twelve years old against some one who had contended for the materiality of the soul, shows considerable wit, reach of thought and power of expression. There is also preserved an entertaining and instructive account of the habits of spiders, as observed by himself, written before he was 13. But the very first exercises of his mind were doubtless of the nature of religious meditation, and he could not recollect the time when he was not imbued with a deep sense of religion. In an account of his conversion, written later in life for the benefit of his children, he says: "I had a variety of concerns and exercises about my soul from my childhood, but had two most remarkable seasons of awakening before I met with that change by which I was brought to those new dispositions and that new sense of things that I have since had. The first time was when I was a boy, some years before I went to college, at a time of remarkable awakening in my father's congregation. I was then very much affected for many months, and concerned about the things of religion and my soul's salvation, and was abundant in religious duties. I used to pray five times a day in secret, and to spend much time in religious conversation with other boys. * * * I with some of my school fellows joined together and built a booth in a swamp, in a very retired spot, for a place of prayer, and besides I had particular secret places of my own in the woods, where I used to retire by myself, and was from time to time much affected."

At thirteen years of age he entered Yale College, far advanced in general and classical learning, and in his freshman year read Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding with appreciation and delight, as shown by some of his notes which have been published. His pleasure in reading and annotating on the topics of this great work, has been likened to that of the miser when gathering up handfuls of silver and gold from some newly discovered treasure.

While in the senior class his second awakening took place, which was speedily followed by a second relapse. "In process of time," he writes, "my convictions and affections wore off, and I entirely lost all those affections and delights, and left off secret prayer, at least as to any constant performance of it, and returned like a dog to his vomit, and went on in the ways of sin. Indeed I was at times very uneasy, especially toward the latter part of my time in college, when it pleased God to seize me with a pleurisy, in which he brought me nigh unto the grave and shook me over the pit of hell; and yet it was not long after my recovery before I fell again into my old ways of sin."

At seventeen he graduated with great reputation for both knowledge and wisdom, and he dates his final and entire conversion shortly after. Its chief symptom he thus describes: "From my childhood up my mind had been full of objections against the doctrine of God's sovereignty, choosing whom he would to eternal life, and hardening whom he pleased, leaving them eternally to perish and be everlastingly tormented in hell. It used to appear like a horrible doctrine to me; but I remember the time very well when I seemed to be convinced and fully satisfied as to the sovereignty of God, and his justice in thus eternally disposing of men according to his sovereign pleasure. * * * And there has been a wonderful alteration in my mind with respect to the doctrine of God's sovereignty from that day to this, so that I scarce ever have found so much as the rising of an objection against it, in the most absolute sense, in God's showing mercy to whom he will show mercy and hardening whom he will. God's absolute sovereignty and justice, with respect to salvation and damnation, is what my mind seems to rest assured of as much as of anything I see with my eyes; at least it is so at times."

In commenting on this part of his life an eminent writer says: "We cannot avoid giving our readers a little insight into the narrative of his conversion, especially as it contains some passages of deep feeling and sensibility which form a striking contrast to the controversial hardness of his other writings. It is full of bursts of tenderness and even whilst the subject of his earliest meditations were the same dark doctrines in their most tremendous form, which he afterwards defended so ably by the help of his mature reason amidst all the gloom which naturally surrounds them, they seem to have left upon his mind no sentiments but those of gentleness and charity. * * *

In this document of Mr. Edwards' early opinions we have said that, amidst all the horrors of his creed, there are many indications of the natural fineness and sensibility of his spirit. The following passages are remarkably beautiful and have about them a tone of pastoral or rather scriptural poetry. "Not long after I first began to experience these things I gave an account to my father of some things that had passed in my mind. I was pretty much affected by the discourse we had together; and when the discourse was ended I walked abroad alone in a solitary place in my father's pasture for contemplation. And as I was walking there and looked up on the sky and clouds, there came into my mind so sweet a sense of the glorious majesty and grace of God, that I know not how to express it. God's excellency, his wisdom, his purity and love, seemed to appear in everything; in the sun, moon and stars; in the clouds and blue sky; in the grass, flowers and trees; in the water and all nature, which used greatly to fix my mind. I often used to sit and view the moon for a long time, and so in the day time spent much time in viewing the clouds and sky to behold the sweet glory of God in these things; in the meantime singing forth with a loud voice my contemplation of the Creator and Redeemer. I used to be a person uncommonly terrified with thunder; and it used to strike me with terror when I first saw a thunderstorm rising; but now, on the contrary, it rejoiced me. I felt God at the first appearance of a thunderstorm, and used to take an opportunity at such times to fix myself to view the clouds and see the lightning play and hear the majestic and awful voice of God's thunder." * * * There is a poetry and grandeur in some of his passages of this sort, which show a moral sublimity of genius in the midst of enthusiastic reveries, often in inferior minds more productive of dark and disorderly sentiments than of sound and elevated piety. When he comes, however, to reason on his theological and philosophical tenets, he is no longer either an enthusiast or a poet, for then he proceeds with all the pertinacity and ingenuity of a hard headed dialectician, determined neither to tolerate nor employ any weapon but stern argument. —Encyc. Britannica 7th Edition Art. Edwards.

After graduating he remained two years in New Haven, studying divinity. In the 19th year of his age (1722) he was licensed to preach and in August of that year, accepted a call to New York city. His diary while there shows that his mind was constantly employed in religious meditation. On the 12th of Jan., 1723, "I made a solemn dedication of myself to God; and wrote it down, giving up myself and all that I had to God; to be for the future in no respect my own, to act as one who had no right to himself in any respect." About this time he wrote out 70 resolutions which he kept before him as his guides through the remainder of his life. They refer mostly to the governing of his morals and the performance of religious exercises. They are published in his "Life by Dr. Dwight." After a ministry of eight months in N. Y., which gave abundant satisfaction, circumstances induced him to return to his father's house. He formed warm attachments in New York. "My heart seemed to sink within me at leaving the family and city where I had passed so many pleasant days. I went to Wethersfield by water and as I sailed away I kept sight of the city as long as I could." But at Saybrook where he went on shore to spend the Sabbath, he recovered his composure in "a refreshing season walking alone in the fields." The summer of 1723 was devoted to theological studies at his father's house. In the fall he went to New Haven to receive the degree of Master of Arts. Was elected a tutor of Yale College, and continued in this position two years.* "His tutorial renown," says President Stiles, "was great and excellent." He then accepted a call to the church at Northampton, as colleague to his grandfather, Rev. Solomon Stoddard, who was far advanced in years, and whom he shortly succeeded as sole pastor, being installed Feb. 27, 1727. On the 28th of the following July, he m. Sarah, daughter of Rev. James and Mary Hooker Pierpont of N. Hav. She was b. Jan. 9, 1707. Her father was the second pastor of the first church in New Haven, a son of John and Thankful (Stowe) Pierpont of Roxbury, Mass. Her mother was a daughter of Rev. Samuel Hooker of Farmington and a gr. dau. of Rev. Thomas Hooker, the leader and first pastor of the colony at Hartford; her ancestry was noble and she did it no discredit. She was a young lady of uncommon beauty. Not only is this the language of tradition, but Dr. Hopkins who first saw her when the mother of seven children, says "she was more than ordinarily beautiful, and her portrait painted by Smybert in 1740, exhibits that peculiar loveliness of expression, which is the combined result of intelligence, cheerfulness and benevolence." This picture now hangs with that of her husband, by the same artist, in the gallery of Yale College.

To her natural advantages were added all that a superior education could give. In her manners she was gentle, courteous and amiable, and the law of kindness appeared to govern all her conduct and conversation. She was a rare example of early piety, warm and animated, and under the control of true delicacy and sound discretion. Mr. Edwards had known her several years before her marriage, and in 1723 (when she was but thirteen years of age) he wrote on the blank leaf of a book, this remarkable description of her: "They say there is a young lady in New Haven who is beloved of that Great Being who made and rules the world, and that there are certain seasons in which this Great Being in some way or other comes to her and fills her mind with exceeding sweet delight, and that she hardly cares for anything except to meditate on Him. That she expects after a while to be received up where He is, to be raised up out of the world and caught up into heaven; being assured that He loves her too well to let her remain at a distance from Him always. That she is to dwell with Him and be ravished with His love and delight forever. Therefore, if you present all the world before her with the richest of its treasures, she disregards it and cares not for it, and is unmindful of any path of affliction. She has a superior purity in her affections; is most just and conscientious in all her conduct, and you could not persuade her to do anything wrong or sinful, if you should give her all this world, lest she should offend this Great Being. She is of a wonderful sweetness, calmness and universal benevolence, especially after the Great God has manifested Himself to her mind. She will sometimes go about from place to place singing sweetly, and seems always to be full of joy and pleasure, and no one knows for what. She loves to be alone, especially in the fields and groves, and seems to have some one invisible always conversing with her."

Devoted as Mr. Edwards was to study he was less acquainted with most of his temporal affairs than many of his neighbors, and seldom knew where or by whom his forage for winter was gathered, or how many milk kine he had; whence his table was furnished, or by what means his wants were provided for. Mrs. Edwards took almost the whole direction of the temporal affairs of the family without doors and within, managing them with great wisdom and prudence as well as cheerfulness. And in the still more delicate and difficult duties of a mother he could safely commit his young and growing family to her love, faithfulness, wisdom and piety. She encouraged exclusively female meetings for prayer and religious conversation, in which she took her proper share, and in this way helped to bring about the frequent revivals for which the Northampton church was remarkable during the ministry of Mr. Edwards. They lived together thirty years, and he was to the end the same enthusiastic admirer. She relieved him from all cares beyond his study, whither every day she carried in a silver bowl his simple diet; and every night, after the other members of their family had retired to rest, they met there to spend an hour in conversation and prayer.

*The only real estate then belonging to the college was the old homestead of William Tuttle on which had been erected its first building, and on the very spot where Edwards studied, taught and won "his great and excellent tutorial renown." Elizabeth Tuttle, the grandmother of Edwards, had passed the years of her childhood and youth, until as the wife of Richard Edwards she removed to Hartford and became the ancestress of "a glorious posterity." A posterity that has reflected, perhaps, more lustre on the name of Yale, than that of any pilgrim to these shores from the landing on Plymouth Rock,

In 1731, Edwards visited Boston, and while there delivered before an association of ministers, a sermon, which by their request was published. It was the first of his works which was printed, and it made such an impression that public thanks were offered to the Head of the Church for raising up so great a teacher. In 1734 occurred a remarkable revival in his own church at Northampton, an account of which he published at the time under the title, A Faithful Narrative of the Surprising Work of God in the Conversion of Many Hundreds of Souls in Northampton. This work excited great interest and was republished in England from Edwards' manuscript under the editorship of the celebrated Dr. Isaac Watts in 1736. This was the beginning of "The Great Awakening," which culminated in 1740-1. The revival was general throughout the country and extended to the remotest colonies of America and to England and to Scotland. Ministers and congregations from all parts of New England applied to Edwards for assistance and besought him to come among them and preach. As in all seasons of great excitement, fanatical excesses were committed which brought religion into contempt and in other ways some evil was mingled with the good. Edwards, though full of zeal and earnestness, had no sympathy with fanaticism; to moderate and guide the misdirected and the overzealous, he wrote his Treatise on the Religious Affections, published 1746.

In the year 1747, David Brainerd, the famous missionary to the Indians, came to the house of Edwards to die. During his sickness, Jerusha Edwards gave him her constant care and attention. They were, no doubt, betrothed. "She was a person of much the same spirit as Brainerd," said her father. He died Oct. 9, 1747; and Jerusha followed him about four months later and was buried by his side. Mr. Edwards wrote the Life of David Brainerd, published in 1749.

During all the years of his pastorate at Northampton, Mr. Edwards was indefatigable in the discharge of his official duties and diligent in self-improvement. "His preaching produced effects which have never been surpassed. His church became the largest protestant society in the world. He stood at the head of the clerical profession in New England. Wherever he preached crowds hung upon his lips. While yet a young man sermons and volumes of his were republished in Great Britain and widely circulated. He was the first American author who achieved a European reputation. He held this position many years. On the 20th of June, 1750, he was ignominiously dismissed from the church at Northampton. Where does the ignominy rest?

About six years before, he had offended an influential part of his congregation by taking some very active and, as they affirmed, arbitrary measures in consequence of the reported circulation of obscene books among the younger members of his flock. He was openly resisted in his attempts to make a public example of the offenders, and his influence over his people from that time began to wane. But a more potent cause of the final rupture was a different one. In the eastern colonies, upwards of a century ago, all the politicians and men of fashion managed to retain a "regular standing" in some religious society; it was essential to their respectability. It was not deemed necessary that they should make a public profession or practice the duties of christianity, only so far as to give an intellectual assent to its doctrines. They could not, or would not, say that they had really embraced christianity. In short they were unconverted persons. In Mr. Edwards' church the custom had been introduced by his predecessor, Mr. Stoddard, not without opposition, of admitting such persons to participation in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. About 1744 Edwards began to insist on a return to the old custom. A fierce opposition was raised. The next six years was spent in continual disputations, and in vain attempts to break the resolute will of Edwards, determined that the line of demarcation between the church and the world should not be entirely obliterated. Efforts at mediation and compromise failed. His dismissal was clamored for. A council of neighboring pastors, appointed to adjudicate between the parties, voted, by a majority of one, the expediency of an immediate dissolution of the pastoral relation of Mr. Edwards to his flock. When it came to the people for a final vote, it is said that those who were never there before now thronged the meeting house to prevent their own disfranchisement; that a mob succeeded in procuring the dismissal of the wisest and most faithful of pastors. The vote was over 200 to 20. After this he occasionally supplied the pulpit, pending the appointment of his successor, until a vote was passed prohibiting his return. Through all this contest Edwards bore himself heroically. No passionate word or unseemly act marred the grand composure of his speech, or the dignity of his conduct; but with strong and steady persistence in what he knew to be his duty he fought the good fight to the end, willing to suffer all things for the sake of his Master. Some of those who were the most violent in opposition, years afterwards, when time had given them opportunities for reflection, repented in sack cloth and ashes. In 1751 he removed to Stockbridge, Mass., as a missionary to preach to the Indians and a small church of Anglo-Americans which had been formed there by an earlier missionary. He had a wife and eight children to support; his salary was small; his daughters made laces and painted fans, which were sent to Boston for sale. Soon after his settlement he announced in a letter to his friend Erskine of Scotland, his intention to write a work upon Free Will and Moral Agency, in which he would bring the objections to the "Calvinistic divinity" to the test of the strictest reasoning, and particularly that great objection in which the modern writers have so much gloried, so long triumphed with so great a degree of insult toward the most excellent divines, and in effect against the gospel of Christ, that the Calvinistic notions of God's moral government are contrary to the common sense of mankind." This work was written in four months.

The controversy at Northampton did not begin nor end there. It was simply an outbreak of the old disagreement between the materialism, the stubborn pride, selfishness and self-indulgence of human nature, when left to itself, and the spirit of duty, humility, self-sacrifice and dependence on God, embodied in Edwards, formulated in doctrine, defended by an intellect of amazing power, and fortified by an unconquerable resolution. His theology is liked in certain quarters, no better, or even less, now than it was then, and the man himself is regarded with an aversion, often thinly veiled, but sometimes expressed in open and coarse denunciation. At a late meeting of modern philosophers and litterati in an eastern city, Edwards was called "a scoundrel (we beg pardon of our readers), a hypocrite who did not believe what he taught, who in fact knew better." Another critic, if not more profound, at least in far better taste says:

"The fruit to taste which comprised an education, the talking ophidian, the many centuried patriarchs, the floating menagerie with the fauna of the drowning world represented on its decks; the modeling of the first woman about the bone of the first man. All these things were to him, as to those about him, as real historical facts as the building of the pyramids. His argument is, we are free to follow, but not to form our will, as that of necessity obeys the strongest motive. As the natural man since the fall is corrupt, his motives and consequently his volitions are evil, until changed by grace, which is a free gift to such as are elected from eternity. The doctrine of self-determining will as the ground of all moral good and evil, tends to prevent any proper exercise of faith in God and Christ in the affair of our salvation, as it tends to prevent all dependence upon them. There is no sufficient reason for attacking the motives of a man so saintly in life; so holy in aspirations; so patient, so meek, so laborious, so thoroughly in earnest in the work to which his whole life was given. * * * A natural man is better than an unnatural theologian. It is less violence to our nature to deify proto-plasm than it is to diabolize the Deity. The practical effect of his teachings, revivals in which the majority of the converts fell away, nervous disorders of all sorts, insanity and suicide, bitter alienation and quarrel with his people, if this was a successful ministry, what disasters would constitute a failure."—O. W. Holmes.

There is no need of an answer to the indictment, as to "the bitter alienation and quarrel with his people;" we have seen what that means. But there are some very questionable assertions of fact, and some more than questionable inferences in the the above quotation. Is it true that the majority of the converts fell away? That nervous disorders of all sorts, insanity and suicide were the practical effect of his teachings? That his ministry was not a successful one? Can reforms be affected or attempted without conflict? Can a radical change in moral disposition and habit from evil to good be accomplished in the individual without mental or emotional disturbance? It is the old controversy. With respect to the work of Edwards on the will described so glibly and measured in the few lines above quoted, and his mental calibre or grade, a great writer speaks by implication as of "that class of mighty and terrible minds, for which are reserved in some sort certain problems which are dangerous and unfathomable abysses to all others; tremendous reveries and sublimities of speculation, from which some very great minds like Swedenborg and Pascal have glided into insanity; all those profundities; to the apostle converging upon God; to the Atheist upon annihilation—destiny, good and evil; the war of being against being; the conscience of man; the thought-like dreams of the animal; the transformation of death * * the soul, nature, liberty, necessity; difficult problems, sinister depths towards which are drawn the gigantic archangels of the human race."—Victor Hugo.

Edwards had much spare time in Stockbridge, and had in view several great literary enterprises, one of which was begun but not ready for the press. It was "A History of the Work of Redemption," a complete system of divinity on a new plan. It would probably have been his masterpiece, and would have raised him in reputation as much higher than he is now, as his completed works entitle him to be ranked above all other theological writers of his age. Another work he contemplated was the "Harmony of the Old and New Testament." In the autumn of 1754 he was seized with a severe fever, from which he did not recover until the following January; and his favorite pursuits were still further interrupted by the French and Indian war, during which soldiers were quartered in his house. In the last three years, however, he wrote some of his ablest works, among which are the dissertations on God's Last End in the Creation of the World, and on the Nature of True Virtue. "The last of these subjects has been a favorite one with ethical writers. Aristotle regarded virtue as an iusto milieu; Hume says it is whatever is useful or agreeable to ourselves and others; and Paley, who, as well as Hume, had been a careful reader of Edwards, that it is "the doing good to mankind in obedience to the will of God, and for the sake of everlasting happiness." Edwards held it to be in some sense, the same as beauty; in other words, to be every voluntary act, of which the ultimate end is the greatest good to the greatest number. This dissertation is perhaps the most original of his works, and is so conclusive that all others on the subject have since been considered as objects of curiosity rather than as guides to opinion. Among the writers who have been largely indebted to it was William Godwin, who, in his Political Justice, as Robert Hall well observes, "With a daring consistence has pursued the principles of Edwards to an extreme from which that excellent man would have recoiled with horror."

His treatise on Original Sin is usually ranked next to that on the Will, for clearness, force and comprehensiveness. It was finished in 1757. Dr. Taylor of Norwich had boasted that his own argument on this question could never be answered. The refutation of it by Edwards was so complete that even Taylor was compelled to admit that there could be no rejoinder, and his mortification is said to have shortened his days.

While Edwards was laboring with his wonted industry at Stockbridge, he received intelligence of the death of his son-in-law, Rev. Aaron Burr, Pres. of the College of New Jersey; and a few days afterward a letter from the Trustees advised him that he had been elected to the vacant office. He submitted the question to some of his friends, and acting on their advice, accepted the invitation and proceeded to Princeton, where he arrived in Jan., 1758. A few days afterward he was informed of the death of his father. Several weeks passed before his inauguration, but he preached in the mean time in the college chapel, which his fame caused to be filled on every occasion to its utmost limits. He was inaugurated on the 16th of Feb. On the 23d he was inoculated for the small-pox, which then prevailed in the town, and on the 22d of March he died of that disease.

To his daughter, Lucy, who attended him in his last sickness, he said: "It seems to be the will of God that I must shortly leave you. Therefore, give my kindest love to my dear wife, and tell her that the uncommon union that has so long subsisted between us has been of such a nature as I trust is spiritual, and, therefore, will continue forever. And I hope she will be supported under so great a trial, and submit cheerfully to the will of God. And as to my children, who are now likely to be left fatherless, which I hope will be an inducement to you all to seek a Father, who will never fail you. And as to my funeral, I would have it to be like Mr. Burr's, and any additional sum of money that might be expected to be laid out that way, I would have it disposed of to charitable uses." Persons at the bedside lamented the loss his death would be to the college and to religion, to whom he replied: "Trust in God, and ye need not fear." These were his last words.

In person he was tall, slender and slightly stooping; his face, very pale and somewhat wasted, wore an aspect of singular refinement and dignity; his manner calm and gentle; he spoke very little. He lamented his awkward address and unimposing presence. "I have a constitution," he says, "in many respects peculiarly unhappy, attended with flaccid solids and, vapid sily and scarce fluids, and a low tide of spirits; often occasioning a childish weakness and contemptableness of speech, presence and demeanor and a disagreeable dullness and stiffness much unfitting me for conversation." "Admirable to such a man," says Parton, "must have seemed the alert and brilliant Burr, so thoroughly alive, with every faculty at instant command, of dauntless self-possession, with a presence and address that invited confidence and disarmed impertinence. Burr on his part had good sense and modesty enough to know that with all his shining qualities he was no more the superior of Jonathan Edwards than an armory is superior to the mine of ore, from which the polished weapons of a thousand armories can be made."—Life of Burr.

ment, Praise and Blame, 1754; The Great Christian Doctrine of Original Sin Defended, containing a reply to the objections of Dr. John Taylor, 1758; The History of Redemption; A Dissertation Concerning the End for which God Created the World; A Dissertation Concerning the True Nature of Christian Virtue. The three last were published after his death. He also wrote several volumes of sermons, printed at various times and often reprinted in England as well as in America. The Life of David Brainerd, 1749; An Inquiry into the Qualifications for Full Communion in the Visible Church, 1749; Miscellaneous Observations on Important Theological Subjects, London, 1796, and several other tracts of less importance. In 1809 an edition of his works by Dr. Austin was published in England.

In 1830 an edition of his works in ten vols. was pub. by Dr. Sereno E. Dwight. The Freedom of the Will has been published separately, with an introductory essay, by Mr. Taylor, author of the Natural History of Enthusiasm. An old desk on which the Freedom of the Will was written is in possession of the Theological Seminary of Yale College. In 1872 the descendants of Edwards erected a monument to his memory at Stockbridge, Mass. It is of red Scotch granite, fifteen feet high, and stands on the public square west of the Cemetery. Among some recently discovered manuscripts was found a treatise on the Trinity by Edwards. It was published by Charles Scribner, New York, 1880.

A memorial window in the chapel of Yale College is inscribed: "Jonathan Edwards, Summi in ecclesia ordinis Vates; fuit rerum sacramum philosophus qui saeculorum admirationem meret; Dei cultu mystice amantissimus; hic studebat, docebat."

His fame is great in all Christian lands, and his works and character the admiration of the most profound thinkers and of the best men of every generation since his time; an admiration expressed in terms as varied, as strong and as emphatic as human ingenuity can invent. Yet as we have seen, very opposite views are entertained and expressed in disparagement of his genius and vituperation of his character. It is therefore eminently proper to add here the testimony of men whose opinions the world has been accustomed to regard with respect, in order that detraction may not destroy the legitimate influence, which cannot well be spared yet, of a great name and a noble life.

"Edward's sermons seem to me the best in the language."—Rev. Dr. Mathias Bruen, first pastor of the Bleeker St. Presb. chh. N. Y.

In a recent work on American literature Prof. Tyler considers Jonathan Edwards the most original and acute thinker yet produced in America. He gives full credit to the traditions that have come down to us of the tremendous effects produced by Edwards' presentation of the Calvinistic theology. Such was the power of his sincerity, of his solemnity and of his logic that he wrought results not surpassed even by Whitfield's eloquence. "As a theologian and metaphysician, as the author of 'Freedom of the Will' and the champion of Calvinism, as the inspirer and drill master of innumerable minds, Edwards fills a large place in ecclesiastical and philosophical history."

When Samuel Hopkins, the distinguished theologian of Newport, was a student at Yale, Mr. Whitfield appeared there and in Oct. 1740 preached to crowded assemblies. Mr. Hopkins heard him and was somewhat impressed, and justified him with those who were disposed to condemn him. The next spring Gilbert Tennant (the famous itinerant) came and stayed about a week and preached seventeen sermons. "He was," says Hopkins, "a remarkably plain and rousing preacher, and every person in the college seemed to be under a degree of awakening and conviction." Hopkins admired his preaching, thought him the greatest and best man he had ever seen or heard, and determined when he should leave college to go and live with him wherever he might be found. But on the 17th day of Sept., just before he was to take his degree, Jonathan Edwards of Northampton visited New Haven and preached his celebrated sermon on "Trial of the Spirits." Hopkins heard it and was so affected that he changed his mind in respect to Mr. Tennant and resolved to reside with Mr. Edwards when he should have opportunity."—Autobiography.

"The greatest metaphysician in America."—Sprague's Annals of the American Pulpit.

"Jonathan Edwards, the most gifted of all the men of the 18th century; perhaps the most profound thinker of the world." * * * "clear-sighted as the eagle, untrifling as the light that travels from the fixed stars, regarding the wide field of human thought with a glance more delicate and comprehensive than Plato; an imagination no less sublime and a soul how much more serenely pure than that of Bacon, he stands the foremost among all philosophical thinkers, ancient or modern."—Hollister's Hist. of Conn.

"His influence is discernable on every leading mind. Bellamy and Hopkins were his pupils; Dwight was his expositor; Smalley, Emmons and many others were his followers; through Hopkins, his influence reached Kirkland and assisted in moulding the character of Channing. Of all the scholars and philosophers that America had produced before the beginning of the present century, two only had established a considerable and permanent reputation in the world of European thought, Benjamin Franklin and Jonathan Edwards."—Bancroft.

"Recollect your Edwards, erecting in this remote region the standard of orthodoxy for enlightened Protestant Europe."—Alex. H. Everett.

"'The Freedom of the Will' is the greatest achievement of the human intellect."—Daniel Webster.

Seeds from Edwards have taken root in strange places. A single stalk from his philosophy has shed beauty and perfume over wastes of modern speculation. Many of whose opinions all is dross that is not borrowed from him, have exhibited the poverty of their natural powers in assaults upon his system; and others incapable of penetrating beyond the shell of his logic, and of understanding the beauty of his life and doctrine, have done him a much greater injury by professing to be of his school.

The style of Edwards is uncommonly good. It is suitable for his subjects. It has seldom been surpassed in perspicuity and precision. It is deficient in harmony, indeed, and occasionally has other faults of a mechanical sort; but he wrote hastily, and printed without revision. Scarcely any of his sermons were intended for the press, and several of his more extended treatise are but rough drafts of what he designed. He appears never to have thought much of the importance of style, until a few years before his death, when a copy of Richardson's Sir Charles Grandison falling in his hands, he read it with pleasure, and discovered the secret of its influence. From this time he attempted to write more gracefully, and the works on the Will, and on Original Sin, subsequently finished, show that he improved.

He had a very powerful imagination, and some of his writings are full of the most impressive imagery. In his earlier years he gave a free reign to his creative faculty, but afterwards restrained it, except when expression of his thought was difficult without its aid. His wit was of the Damascus sort, shining and keen. He delighted in the reductio ad absurdum, of which his works probably contain the finest specimens in the English Language. He directed his wit against principles, and never against his antagonists.

No assertion in regard to Edwards has been more common than the one that he was not eloquent. The mountebank declamation of these latter days has so perverted men's judgments that they cannot understand how a preacher who rested one arm upon a high pulpit, with its diminutive and delicately moulded hand holding a small manuscript volume all the while close to his eyes, and with the other made slowly his few and only gestures, could be an orator. But he could keep a congregation that had assembled to hear a morning sermon, ignorant of the approach of noon, until through the uncurtained windows of the church, the setting sun's red rays were shining upon its ceiling. One time he was discoursing of death and the Judgment; people rose up from their seats, with pallor on their faces, to see Christ descend through the parting heavens. Being requested to preach at Enfield, where he was a stranger, and the assembly were so indifferent to religion as to be neglectful of the decency of silence while he prayed, he had not half finished his sermon before the startled sinners, having "already passed through the valley of silence," began to wail and weep so bitterly that he could not go on for their distress. These are triumphs of eloquence not dreamed of by such as deem themselves masters of the art, from reading the foolish recipe ascribed to Demosthenes.

In the same page of Mr. Gilfillan's Sketches of Modern Literature, in which he declares that Edwards' style "never rises into eloquence," he gives the following anecdote: "He reminded you of Milton's line, 'The ground burns froze, and cold performs the effect of fire.'" A signal instance of this is recorded. A large congregation, including many ministers, were assembled to hear a popular preacher, who did not fulfill his appointment. Edwards was selected to fill his place, principally because being in the habit of reading his discourses, he happened to have a sermon ready in his pocket. He ascended the pulpit, accordingly, and almost audible marks of disappointment from the audience, whom, however, respect for the abilities and character of the preacher prevented from leaving the church. He chose for his text 'Their foot shall slide in due time,' and began to read in his usual quiet way. At first he had barely their attention; by and by he succeeded in riveting every one of them to his lips; a few sentences more, and they began to rise by twos and threes; a little further, and tears were flowing; at the close of another, particular deep groans were heard, and one or two went off in fits; and ere he reached the climax of his terrible appeals the whole audience had risen up in one tumult of grief and consternation. And, amid all this, there stood the calm, imperturbable man, reading on as softly and gently as if he were in his own study. And in reading the sermon we do not wonder at the impression it produced upon an audience constituted as that must have been. It is a succession of swift thunder claps, each drowning and deafening the one which preceded it. We read it once to a distinguished savant, who, while disapproving of its spirit, was compelled literally to shiver under the 'fury of its power.'—Grissold's Prose Writers of America.

"The first man of the world during the second quarter of the eighteenth century was Jonathan Edwards of Conn. As a theologian, Robert Hall and Thomas Chalmers admit that he was the greatest who has lived in the Christian ages. And as a metaphysician, Dugald Stewart and Sir James Mackintosh agree that he was never surpassed. In Great Britain and on the continent of Europe, men disavowed belief in some of his doctrines, but confessed that they had only protests to oppose to them. Edwards had anticipated and refined all their arguments. Adopting some of his principles, others built up for themselves great reputations by perverting them, or deducing from them illegitimate conclusions. In whatever light he is regarded he commands our admiration. He was unequalled in intellect and unsurpassed in virtue. Bacon was described as the wisest, and the meanest of mankind; but Edwards, not inferior to the immortal chancellor in genius, suffered not even an accusation of anything unbecoming a gentlemen, a philosopher, or a christian."

But in a country which was still almost a wilderness; educated in a college which had scarcely a local habitation; settled a large part of his life over a church upon the confines of civilization, and the rest of it in the very midst of barbarism, in the humble but honorable occupation of a missionary, he owed nothing to adventitious circumstances. With a fragile body, a fine imagination, and a spirit the most gentle that ever thrilled in the presence of the beautiful, he seemed of all men the least fitted for the great conflict in which he was engaged. But He who giving to Milton the Dorian Reed, sent out his Seraphim to enrich him with utterance and knowledge; with fire from the same altar purified the lips of Edwards to teach that "true religion consists in holy affections" the spring of all which is "a love of divine things for their own beauty and sweetness."—Grissold's Prose Writers.

"We lose our religious emotions in the intellectual contemplation of its objects. It need not be so on the earth to the extent which it is, as appears in the life and writings of Edwards, whose vigor of intellect, compass of thought, patience of investigation, accuracy of discrimination, power of argument, knowledge of the Bible, and strength of holiness, stand unrivaled.

But for his piety, he might have been a skeptic, more dangerous than Hume or Voltaire, and but for the command of his religion over all his powers, he might have been one of the most dangerous, as he certainly was one of the most original and fearless of speculators. But the attractions of his heart to God, kept him in his orbit, and enabled him to go forth and survey and adjust the relations of the moral universe, without becoming a wandering star.

Next after the Bible, read and study, Edwards, whom to understand in theology, accommodated to use, would be as high praise in theological science as to understand Newton's works in accommodation to modern uses of natural philosophy.

Edwards and Fuller are the two best theological writers for a young man to study. But whilst Fuller, availing himself of his own powerful mind acting on Edwards' materials, has written with more conciseness and perspicuity than Edwards, he falls far below him in the ardor of his piety, and in his power of applying truth to the conscience. In this respect Edwards stands unrivaled. There is in his revival sermons more discrimination, power of argument, and pungency of application, than are contained in all the sermons besides which were ever written. Study as models, Edwards' Applications. They are original, multiform and powerful beyond measure. * * * Jonathan Edwards was a prince among preachers. There is no one in our day who comes within a thousand miles of him."—Autobiography of Lyman Beecher. Letter to his Son.

"My illustrious predecessor, Jonathan Edwards, the greatest thinker that this country has produced, in whose dazzling beams the others of us appear as the smaller planets passing over the disk of the sun, has made a bold attempt to resolve all virtue into love."—Dr. McCosh, Pres. Princeton Col., Baccalaureate Sermon, 1875.

"Before the commencement of this century America had but one great man in philosophy; but that one was illustrious. From the days of Plato there has been no life of more simple and imposing grandeur than that of Jonathan Edwards."—Westminster Review.

"The most elaborate treatise on original sin is confessedly that of Pres. Edwards. It is not only the most elaborate but the most complete. There was everything in the intellectual character, the devout habits and the long practice of the great reasoner to bring his gigantic specimen of theological argument as near to perfection as we may expect any human composition to approach. We are not aware that any other human composition exhibits in the same degree as his, the love of truth, mental independence, grasp of intellect, power of concentrating his strength on a difficult inquiry, reverence for God, calm self-possession, superior to all polemical unfairness, benevolent regard for the highest interests of man; keen analysis of argument and the irresistible force of ratiocination. He reminds us of the scene described by Sir Walter Scott between Richard and Saladin, uniting in himself the sharpness of the scimitar and the strength of the battle ax."—London Quarterly Review.

"In theology, Jonathan Edwards is the very Euclid of divines, and the Americans would do well in claiming honor for their geniuses to put him at the head of the list, for the country never produced a greater."—Edinburgh Review.

"Having produced him, the Americans need not despair of their metaphysicians. We do not scruple to say that he is one of the acutest, most powerful and of all reasoners the most conscientious and sincere. His closeness and candor are alike admirable. * * His method is an honest method; there is not a trick, a subterfuge, or a verbal sophism in his whole book. * * * Those who compare his arguments with what Priestly or Hobbs have written on the same subject, will find the one petulant and the other dogmatical."—Edin. Rev. 1829, p. 131.

"Jonathan Edwards' works on The Freedom of the Will and Original Sin are the acknowledged authorities in defence of the leading views of what is generally known as Calvinistic divinity. The Inquiry into the Freedom of the Will is beyond dispute the most complete and masterly treatise in which that subject is regarded as a question of metaphysical theology; and whatever may be the opinions arrived at by the reader as regards either the principal or secondary conclusions of the author, there can be no question as to the profundity of his reasoning, or the clearness and force with which he sets forth his arguments. Edwards was, in fact, one of the greatest metaphysicians of his age, and his writings, though deficient in the graces of style will, apart from their value as exponents of the views of a great theological party, be of permanent value as examples of comprehensive investigation and acute logic."—Encyc. Britannica, 7th Ed. Article Edwards.

"There is, however, one metaphysician of whom America has to boast, who in logical acuteness and subtilty does not yield to any disputant bred in the Universities of Europe. I need not say that I allude to Jonathan Edwards."—Dugald Stewart Introductory Essay, Encyc. Brit., 7th Ed.

"In power of subtle argument he was perhaps unequalled; certainly was unsurpassed among men."—Sir James Mackintosh.

"The greatest of theologians."—Dr Chalmers.

"He was the greatest of the sons of men."—Robert Hall.

"Edwards on the Will is a work which never was answered and which never will be answered."—Dugald Stewart.

"The subject since then has hardly been one of controversy, though it has occasionally been talked about. Some ingenious persons, to attract attention to essays against fatalism, have called them replies to Edwards; but scholars have no need to be informed that Edwards never entertained any such doctrine as that word describes."

Moral and spiritual affinities and sympathies were so close between them that such a result would have been as certain as any operation of natural law, had life and health been spared. After dec. her father said: "She was a person of much the same spirit with Brainerd. She had constantly taken care and attended him in his sickness for 19 weeks before his death, devoting herself to it with great delight because she looked on him as an eminent servant of Jesus Christ. In this time he had much conversation with her on the things of religion; and in his dying state, often expressed to us, her parents, his great satisfaction concerning her true piety and his confidence that he should meet her in heaven, and his high opinion of her, not only as a true christian, but as a very eminent saint; one whose soul was uncommonly fed and entertained with things which appertain to the most spiritual experimental and distinguishing parts of religion, and one who by the temper of her mind was fitted to deny herself for God, and to do good, beyond any young woman whatsoever whom he knew. She had manifested a heart uncommonly devoted to God, in the course of her life many years before her death, and said on her death bed that she "had not seen one minute for several years wherein she desired to live one minute longer for the sake of any other good in life but doing good, living to God and doing what might be for His glory." A few days before the death of Brainard, Mr. Edwards says: "My daughter Jerusha came into his room; he looked on her very pleasantly and said: 'Dear Jerusha, are you willing to part with me?' 'I am quite willing to part with you; I am willing to part with all my friends; I am willing to part with my dear brother John, though I love him the best of any creature living. I have committed him and all my friends to God; though if I thought I should not see you and be happy with you in another world, I could not bear to part with you. But we shall spend a happy eternity together.'"—Edwards' Life of Brainard.

"His life and diary," says a celebrated English divine, "exhibits a perfect pattern of the qualities which should distinguish the instructor of rude and barbarous tribes; the most invincible patience and self-denial; the profoundest humility, exquisite prudence, indefatigable industry, and such a devotedness to God, or rather such an absorption of the whole soul in zeal for the divine glory and the salvation of men, as to be scarcely paralleled since the days of the Apostles. His constitutional melancholy, though it must be regarded as a physical imperfection, imparts an additional interest and pathos to the narrative, since we more easily sympathise with the emotion of sorrow than of joy. There is a monotony in his feelings, it must be acknowledged, and consequently a frequent repetition of the same ideas, which will disgust a fastidious and superficial reader, but it is the monotony of sublimity."

Brainard d. Oct. 9, 1747, a. 29 yrs. and about 4 months later, Jerusha Edwards d. and was buried by his side. "In holy zeal and devotion to the sacred cause of christianity, as a missionary, David Brainard stands confessedly the first in modern times. Compelled to leave the field of duty where his heart lingered, he went to Boston in July, 1747, and returning to Northampton, took up his abode with Jonathan Edwards. In the family of that great and good man his flower of life faded, and when the leaves began to fall in Autumn, he fell, like an apple early ripe, into the lap of the grave."

He preached his first sermon in Greenfield, Conn.; rem. to Hanover, Morris Co., N. J.; ordained pastor 1st Presb. chh. in Newark, N. J., Jan., 1739. He pub. The Supreme Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ Maintained; A Latin Grammar, and several sermons. Stearns' Hist. of the First Presb. Chh. of Newark contains a fine steel portrait of Pres. Burr. Within the comparatively short period of fourteen months from his death, four others of the Edwards family died. Soon after Jonathan Edwards arrived at Princeton to succeed his son-in-law in the presidency of the college, his father, Rev. Timothy Edwards, d. Jan., 1758; two months later, Jonathan Edwards d.; sixteen days afterward Mrs. Burr d., and seven months later the wife of Pres. During a part of that period, Dr. Lyman Beecher was pastor of the chh. at L., and the families were very intimate. Harriet Beecher Stowe says, "How well I remember Judge Reeve's house; wide, roomy and cheerful, it used to be the Eden of our imagination. I remember the great, old fashioned garden with broad alleys set with all sorts of stately bunches of flowers. It used to be my reward when I was good, to spend a Saturday afternoon there, and walk up and down among the flowers and pick currants off the bushes." Says Dr. Lyman Beecher, "Oh! what a man he was! When I get to Heaven and meet him there, what a shaking of hands there will be!" The houses of his favorite families in Litchfield he used to call his "Judge Reeve places."—Autobiography of Lyman Beecher. 82532. Aaron Burr, b. Newark, N. J., Feb. 6, 1756. After d. of his parents he was taken by his uncle, Timothy Edwards, who resided in Elizabethtown, N. J., and lived in his family until he went to Col. When about four years of age he ran away in consequence of some misunderstanding with his preceptor and was not found until the third or fourth day after. The family government of Mr. Edwards was strict and severe, but he is represented as saying in the case of Burr, and also of his younger bro., Pierpont Edwards, whom he brought up, "the rod was spared." It seems, nevertheless, to have been no "maplesugar" government, for Aaron himself relates that one fine afternoon in July he was in a cherry tree in his uncle's garden when he observed coming up the walk an elderly lady, a guest of the house, wearing a silk dress, which was then a rare luxury. The prim behavior and severe morality of this ancient maiden had made her a somewhat odious object in the sight of the boy. Concealed in the tree he amused himself by throwing cherries at her, upon observing which she angrily sought Uncle Timothy, to tell him of Aaron's misconduct. He was then in the 8th year of his age. He was summoned to the study where the case was treated in the severe puritanic method. First came a long lecture on the enormity of the offense, which was followed by a long prayer for the offender's reformation. From the beginning of these ceremonies the boy well knew how they were to end, and he could form an idea of the severity of the coming punishment from the length of the prayer and exhortation. A terrible castigation followed; or as Burr used to express it, "he licked me like a sack."—Parton.

At the age of ten he wanted to go to sea and ran away to New York and entered himself on board a vessel as a cabin boy. Pursued by his uncle he found refuge at the masthead, from which he refused to budge until terms of peace satisfactory to himself had been agreed upon. When eleven years of age he was prepared for college, but was not permitted to enter till next year; he grad. with distinction at Princeton, at the age of sixteen. While in college he won a small sum at his first game of billiards, and was so mortified that he never played again at any game for money. About the time that he left college, being uneasy in his mind on the subject of religion, he resolved to visit the Rev. Dr. Bellamy at Bethlehem, Conn., and with him pursued a course of religious study and conversation (from autumn of 1773 to spring of 1774). His conclusions on certain Calvinistic points of faith were somewhat at variance with those of his preceptor; but henceforth he avoided all religious disputation.

EXPEDITION TO QUEBEC.

In July, 1775, being a little more than nineteen years of age, he left Elizabethtown for Cambridge to offer his services to the patriot cause. While in Cambridge, the confusion, absence of discipline and organization, disease among the troops, and selfish squabbles about rank among the officers, so disgusted him that he was prostrated with a nervous fever. The news of Arnold's proposed expedition for the capture of Quebec re-animating him, and though still weak and feeble in health, he shouldered his musket and on Sept. 14, 1775, started for Newburyport, whence the expedition was to sail. At N. he found a message from his uncle Edwards, ordering his return, and two men who delivered the order, seemed disposed to enforce it, but were met with such manifestations of spirit and resolution on the part of the youthful patriot that he was allowed to proceed. The expedition started too late. By the time they were well on their way, the usual fine autumn weather was past, and the succeeding fall rains greatly increased the difficulties and dangers of the march. From the head of navigation on the Kennebec river, it was an unbroken wilderness for three hundred miles.

Their bateaux had to be dragged over waterfalls, portages, lofty mountains, deep morasses, and through thick woods. Dogs, reptiles, cartridge boxes and shoes were eaten for food, and a part of the army returned to Cambridge to avoid starvation. It was a terrible march, and the story is one of extreme hardship, suffering, peril and privation; many of the men fell in their tracks to rise no more. Burr shared in all these perils and hardships, but being used to an abstemious diet, probably suffered less from hunger than most of the troops. In passing the rapids of the Chaudiere river he proved himself a skillful helmsman, though the boat was carried over a fall of twenty feet and one soldier drowned. The rest reached the shore with great difficulty. Arnold was always in advance with his Indian guides, and Burr believed, did not participate in the privations of his men, for on entering his tent when the troops arrived at Point Levi, he found tea, coffee, loaf sugar, wine and other matters of good living on his table. When the expedition arrived at Point Levi it became necessary to inform Gen. Montgomery, who with his army was at Montreal. Burr was selected as the messenger. Disguising himself as a Catholic priest, he safely and successfully accomplished his dangerous and difficult task. Montgomery was much pleased; invited Burr to remain at headquarters, appointed him his aide, and announced his appointment in general orders before Quebec. Subsequently, Burr planned an attack, which, as appears from later developments, would probably have succeeded. For this assault he requested and obtained command of a small, forlorn hope of forty men, whom he thoroughly prepared by drilling, furnishing with scaling ladders, etc. Another plan, however, was adopted. The assault was made on Dec. 31, 1775, amid a heavy fall of snow. The first barrier was a battery, in front of which was a block house. As the Americans advanced, the troops in the block house fired a few random shots, then threw down their arms and fled, and for a time the barrier was entirely deserted; but the assaulting column being delayed by various obstacles, one or two soldiers of the enemy ventured to return to the battery, and seizing a match, discharged one of the guns. Several were killed, among them Gen. Montgomery, Capt. McPherson, Capt. Cheeseman and others. Every one of the party near the General was killed or wounded excepting Burr, who stood within six feet of Montgomery when he fell. Lieut. Col. Campbell, being next in command, ordered a retreat against the advice of Burr, who declared that had the column pushed on, Quebec would have been taken. Gen. Montgomery was borne from the field in the arms of Burr, for some distance,* but the rapid advance of the enemy compelled him to drop his burden.

AID TO WASHINGTON.

Arriving at Albany, he was notified to meet Washington in New York. He reported accordingly, May 20, 1776, and by invitation became a member of his military family, with the rank of Major. Burr soon became dissatisfied and was inclined to quit the service, but at the instance of John Hancock accepted the position of aid to Gen. Putnam.

This instance has been much used to the prejudice of Burr. The writer of an article in the April number of the Atlantic Monthly, 1858, intimates that a disreputable affair with some female, "similar to that of the beautiful and unfortunate Margaret Moncreiffe which occurred some months afterwards was the cause of the disagreement with Washington." For this insinuation there is not a shadow of fact or evidence, and the writer himself sets it aside in the same sentence to make room for another theory, to wit: "But aside from any such cause there was ground enough in the characters of the two men. Discipline compelled Washington to hold his subordinates at a distance of implied, if not asserted inferiority, and Burr never met a man to whom he thought himself inferior."

*This story is not found in M. L. Davis' biography of Burr, for the reason that the latter forbade its insertion without accompanying evidence. Burr's detractors had fallen into a habit of denying or misrepresenting everything that could be deemed creditable to their victim. This evidence was afterward supplied by Rev. Gardner Spring, whose father, Rev. Samuel Spring, accompanied Arnold on the expedition, and was a witness of the attack. In a note to Mr. Davis, dated Oct. 4, 1838, Rev. Gardner Spring writes: "On my father's last visit he expressed great anxiety to see Col. Burr. I objected, and told him that Burr had lost caste, and that it was not reputable for either to call upon him. For two or three days he relinquished the design, but just before leaving, he said, 'my son, I must see Col. Burr before I leave the city. I went through the woods with him and Arnold. I stood by his side on the Plains of Abraham, and I have not seen him since the morning on which Montgomery fell. It was a heavy snow storm. Montgomery had fallen. The British troops were advancing toward the dead body, and little Burr was hastening from the fire of the enemy, up to his knees in snow, with Montgomery's body on his shoulders. Do you wonder that I wish to see him?'" In 1776 a monument to Gen. Richard Montgomery was erected in St. Paul's church-yard in New York City, by authority of Congress. Forty-two years later, (1818) the state of New York caused his remains to be taken up, removed to N. Y. City, and buried under the monument at the Broadway front of St. Paul's church.

MARGARET MONCREIFFE.

The name of Burr has long been associated in an infamous manner with that of the unfortunate woman named above, and in the reference just quoted the fact that he was her betrayer is implied as a settled fact. Such, no doubt, is the belief of hundreds who have never taken the trouble to ascertain the truth. It is proper, therefore, that the plain story should be told here. At the time when Burr became aid to Putnam there resided in the family of the General a daughter of Col. James Moncreiffe,* named Margaret, her father being with the British army on Long Island. She was detained as a spy. She was fourteen years of age; but a woman in development; witty, vivacious, piquant and beautiful. The young couple, residing in the same family, were much together, and to silence the tongue of scandal which began to wag, the lady was removed to King's Bridge, not by order of Washington, as has been asserted, but by Gen. Putnam and at the request of Burr himself. There was no doubt a strong attachment on one if not on both sides; that is all. Out of these simple facts Burr has been held up to execration, as a monster of turpitude, a seducer of virgin innocence, etc. Sabine, in his Hist. of American Loyalists, though evidently not friendly to the memory of Burr, says he must be held innocent of this charge. The lady herself in her Memoirs, written 1793, says: "O, may these pages one day meet the eye of him (Burr) who subdued my virgin heart, whom the immutable unerring laws of nature had pointed out for my husband, but whose sacred decree the barbarous customs of society violated. To him I pledged my virgin vow and I shall never cease to lament that obedience to my father left it incomplete. When I reflect upon my past suffering, now that, alas, my present sorrows press heavily upon me, I cannot refrain from expatiating a little on the inevitable horrors which ever attend the frustration of natural affections. I, myself, who, unpitied by the world, have endured every calamity that human nature knows, am a melancholy example of this truth; for if I know my own heart, it is far better calculated for the pure joys of domestic life than for the hurricane of extravagance and dissipation in which I have been wrecked. With this companion of my soul how happy should I now have been." Sabine adds, "Upon this written evidence, Burr, be his reputation for intrigue as it may, is to be acquitted of the ruin of Margaret Moncreiffe, since the only proof is from her own pen, and she, instead of accusing him as the author of her woes, looked back to her relations with him as to the happiest memories of her life."

AID TO GENERAL PUTNAM.

By American historians it is generally conceded that the battle of Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776, was disastrous to the patriot cause, and ought not to have been fought. Two days before the battle, Gen. Greene, who commanded there, left the camp, and Gen. Putnam took his place. Burr, as his aid, inspected the troops, and reported that they were undisciplined, badly armed and so unfit for battle that it would be madness to risk one. Three weeks before, he had written to his uncle Edwards, that an engagement * James Moncreiffe of New York, Lieut.-Col. of Engineers; brother-in-law of John Jay and of Gov. Livingston, and uncle of Gen. Richard Montgomery. "I have read somewhere," says Sabine's loyalists, "that he was offered the command of the army for the invasion of Canada subsequently given to Montgomery, but he adhered to the Crown." He planned the works at Charleston, S. C., and was warmly commended by Sir Henry Clinton for skill and good conduct. His services at Savannah were the means of saving it; but at the evacuation of Charleston he shipped off upwards of eight hundred slaves who had been employed on his works, to be sold in Cuba for his own benefit, it is said. He d. in N. Y., 1791, and was buried in Trinity chh. His dau., Margaret m. Capt. John Coghlan of the 8th Foot. (This was the last official act of Rev. Dr. Auchmuty, as rector of Trinity church, who d. 1777.) Capt. Coghlan drove her into the arms of a lover by his brutality. She asserts that she had led a strictly virtuous life until after having been forced into a marriage with a man she loathed, and who treated her with harshness and cruelty. She separated from him and became the mistress of the Duke of York and afterwards of several other noblemen. For a period of fifteen years, from 1780, she made no inconsiderable noise in the fashionable circles of Great Britain and France, alternately revelling in wealth and sunk in squalid poverty until at last she died a broken-hearted woman. Capt. Coghlan was son of a London merchant of great wealth. He entered the British navy as midshipman and went round the world with the celebrated voyager, Capt. Cook. Disliking the sea, he turned his attention to the bar and then to the church, but finally procured a commission in the army. After the close of the American war he obtained permission to serve in the Russian army, but domestic misery (1783) led him into, or accelerated, dissipation, until he broke down. A wretched outcast, he became an inmate of St. Bartholomew's Hospital in London, and died there in 1807, in his 54th year. His relations, both in England and Wales, were very respectable, and his body was retained in the dead house for eight days in the hope that some one of them would claim and give it decent burial; but the charity of a stranger furnished the means of burial in the hospital grounds. It is said that Capt. Coghlan was one of the handsomest men of his day. Social, convivial and in his charities when he had the means, liberal to a fault. One cause of the difference between him and his wife was political, she sympathizing with the Whigs. A novel called Margaret Moncreiffe, founded on this affair was written by C. J. Burdett and published in N. Y. Mr. Burdett was a protege of Col. Burr and was educated by him at Capt. Partridge's Military School at Middletown, Conn.

would be extremely hazardous, and that the retreat from Long Island might be cut off. The results largely verified his prediction. Of the 5,000 troops engaged on the American side, nearly one-half were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners.

On the retreat and embarkation, Burr, from his knowledge of localities, was enabled to render important services. Gen. McDougal who had charge of the embarkation was a witness of the efficiency of the youthful aid, and ever after gave him his entire confidence. On the retreat from New York, Burr undoubtedly saved the brigade of Gen. Sullivan from capture. The facts were afterwards proved by the testimony of eye-witnesses. The brigade had been led by Gen. Knox to a small fort in the suburbs (Grand St. and Bowery) known as Bunker's Hill. Major Burr having been sent out, at his own request, with a few dragoons to pick up stragglers, discovered the error, and after some ineffectual conversation with Gen. Knox, who intended to remain and defend the fort, prevailed upon the men to follow him. Rev. Hezekiah Ripley who was officers' chaplain of the brigade, testified that they were fired upon, and that Burr galloped directly to the spot, shouted to his men to follow, pursued and killed several of the enemy, came back and found that the column had taken the wrong road, immediately led them off to the left and made good their retreat. A similar affair which occurred soon after, caused this of Bunker's Hill to be much talked of. On the 16th of Nov., 1776, Fort Washington, with nearly 3,000 men under Gen. Greene who had been left to defend it, was taken by the enemy after a brave defense. Of the 2,500 men who surrendered, not 500 survived their imprisonment. It was Burr who pointed out to Gen. Putnam the way of escape from the British army, which had occupied the east and middle roads. Neither the American commander nor any of his officers knew how to pass the forests and swamps but Burr, who piloted them through the woods west of Broadway, and by the river bank to Bloomingdale; a complete, but narrow escape. Of these important services no official notice was taken. This injustice in connection with some other minor occurrences about the same time, Burr construed into acts of hostility and his prejudice against the commander-in-chief, became fixed.

MALCOLM'S REGIMENT.

In the spring of 1777, several new regiments were raised, and political Colonels were appointed. The real commanders were the Lieut. Colonels who were experienced officers. Burr was appointed Lieut. Col. of Malcolm's regiment. Col. Malcolm was a merchant in New York, a very good and a very respectable man. After a few weeks observation of his subordinate officer, he very wisely resigned, saying to Burr, "I will be the father of the regiment; you shall have the honor of fighting it."

Malcolm's regiment was made up from different states. Some of the companies contained only a few men and yet had a full complement of officers, who having obtained their commissions were satisfied with matters as they were, neglecting to recruit and to bring up their commands to the proper standard of numbers and discipline. Burr obtained permission from Gen. Conway to expurgate these useless officers. Eleven were discharged in a single day. It is not likely that these gentlemen would cherish feelings of a very friendly nature towards the author of their disgrace, though they acquiesced silently, excepting one young captain, who presuming on his wealthy family connections wrote Burr an insolent letter. The interposition of his female friends protected "Neddy" from unpleasant consequences.

In Sept., 1777, while the regiment lay at Sufferns, intelligence came that the enemy was at Hackensack in great force, and advancing into the country. Col. Burr immediately marched with the effective men, leaving only a guard to take care of the camp. The rest of the story is told by a member of the regt. as follows: "We arrived at Paramus, a distance of sixteen miles before sunset. There were considerable bodies of militia in great alarm and disorder, and doing much mischief to the neighboring farms. They could give no intelligence of the enemy but from rumor. They were supposed to be within a few miles and advancing. Col. Burr set some of the militia to repairing the fences they had destroyed; arranged them as well as time would permit, and having taken measures to secure the troops from surprise, and also for the protection of the corn fields, he marched immediately with about thirty of the most active of the regt., and a few of the militia, to ascertain the position and numbers of the enemy. About 10 o'clock at night, being three miles from Hackensack, we got certain intelligence that we were within a mile of their picket guard. Col. Burr then led the men into a wood, and ordered them to sleep until he should wake them; of which we had great need, having marched more than thirty miles since noon. Col. Burr then went alone to discover the position of the enemy. He returned about half an hour before day, waked us, and told us he was going to attack the picket of the enemy; that we had only to follow him, and then forbade any man to speak or fire on pain of death. He then led us between the sentinels in such a way that we were within a few yards of the picket guard, before they suspected our approach. He then gave the word and we rushed upon them before they had time to take their arms and the greater part of them were killed. A few prisoners and some accoutrements were brought off without the loss of a man. Col. Burr immediately sent off an express to Paramus to order all the troops to move and to rally the country. Our little success had so encouraged the inhabitants that they turned out with great alacrity and put themselves under the command of Col. Burr. But the enemy probably alarmed by these threatening appearances retreated the next day, leaving behind them the greater part of the plunder they had taken." This had the effect of preventing further excursions on the part of the enemy in that section.

AT VALLEY FORGE.

During the winter at Valley Forge, Col. Burr proposed to Gen. Washington an expedition against Staten Island. It was declined, but the attempt was afterward made by Gen. Stirling and failed. The sufferings of the army at Valley Forge brought the patriot cause to the verge of ruin. Conspiracies, mutinies and disbandment were rife in the camp. On one occasion Col. Burr alone and unaided, suppressed a mutiny, without bloodshed except cutting off the arm of the ringleader. As this man stepped out of the ranks, and with mutinous words invited his comrades to follow him, Burr, by a single stroke of his sabre, cut off his arm. The rest were awed into submission.—Kuapp's Life of Burr.

AT MONMOUTH.

At the battle of Monmouth, June 28, 1778, Col. Burr commanded a brigade in the division of Lord Stirling. Desiring to dislodge the enemy from an advantageous position, he requested and obtained permission to make the attempt. As he was advancing with spirit at the head of his men, and had come within the enemy's fire, he received an order from Gen. Washington to halt where he was. He perceived the disaster, but obeyed like a good soldier, and saw one-third of his men destroyed by the enemy's artillery, without being able to fire a shot. As he sat in his saddle awaiting further orders, a cannon ball killed his horse, striking just behind the girth of the saddle. The rider had just stretched his legs forward of the spot for greater ease of position. After this slaughter he was allowed to take part in the battle, and his conduct was praised by the whole army. ibid. This disaster sunk deep into his mind and strengthened his distrust of Washington as a military man. In after years, when M. L. Davis was preparing the biography of Burr, he was desired to re-open this matter of Monmouth. Mr. Davis declined. The fatigue and chagrin of this day at Monmouth had a very injurious and lasting effect on his health, and in Oct., 1778, he asked to be furloughed without pay, as he never held office for the emolument it offered. The furlough was not granted on that condition, and he rejoined his regiment at West Point, of which he was for a while in command.

IN WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

His defense of the lines in Westchester Co. in 1778-9, would require too much space to relate in detail. With about six hundred men he kept the adjacent country in a state of security and quiet, and the enemy in complete check. He lived abstemiously and shared all the hardships of his soldiers, and was even more severe to himself than to others. He visited the sick, prescribed and administered their medicines, and after a while they would take it from no one else. With all his other accomplishments he was a good nurse. At the same time he was a strict disciplinarian, and was feared as well as loved by his men. In the summer of 1779, being worn out and in poor health, he resigned. The officer who succeeded him being unable with the same force to maintain the lines, new ones were formed further up the river, and the intermediate country abandoned.

AT NEW HAVEN.

After his resignation, Col. Burr retired to New Haven and was there when the British took possession of the place, July 5, 1779. He arose from his sick bed, and though barely able to mount his horse, took command of a body of Yale College students at their request, and assisted in repulsing the enemy. To this incident he always referred with exultation and pride, as evincing the confidence of the young men. This was the last act of his military life. He was fitted by genius and character to have done much greater things, and had opportunities been given him, to have rendered far greater services to his country.

MILITARY CHARACTER.

Reference has been made to the esteem and confidence in which Col. Burr was always held by Gen. McDougal after the retreat from Long Island.

Lieut. Robert Hunter, who served two years under Burr, had an unbounded respect for his talents and character. "If any officer," said he, "deserves recognition, it is Col. Burr. He sacrificed his health, and underwent more fatigue and privation than any other officer of whom I had any knowledge. His superiority as a military man was universally allowed."

Gen. Poor spoke of Burr as a first rate officer. Col. Brooks and Col. Wigglesworth were often heard by Mr. Knapp to speak of Burr as of those who were born for great commanders. These officers were the pride of the Revolutionary Army. Col. Wigglesworth was with Arnold on Lake Champlain against Carlton, and supplied Arnold with nautical science. He was the best historical student of his time in America. Col. Brooks was considered the most accomplished officer of the state of Mass. He was for many years Major Gen. of the Middlesex division. Adjutant Gen. of the state militia; Governor and Commander-in-Chief. These men were not politically of the same party with Burr, but spoke of him as they knew him, and in accordance with their own honest convictions. "In fact, there was never the slightest difference of opinion among the officers of the Revolutionary army in respect to Burr's military talents. He was known to all as a beardless youth, with great intelligence, penetration, high moral and physical courage, a lofty sense of duty, and readiness to meet every danger. He knew the means necessary to the end of every military movement, and had the courage to retreat as well as to attack when prudence dictated."—Knapp.

In later years, when the slanders of political and personal rivals and enemies had robbed his name of almost every claim to the consideration, sympathy or fellowship of mankind, Burr himself remarked: "If they persist in saying that I was a bad man, they shall at least admit that I was a good soldier." Subsequently, when Hamilton was made Lieut. Gen. of the army, Burr was unable to obtain a Brigadier-Generalship. Detraction may have a temporary success, and kill its victims with its poisoned arrows. Adulation may build up fictitious reputations, and put its creatures into lofty seats; but the great ally of Truth is Time, and the moral of Wellington's saying, that "when my life is written, many statues must come down," has a universal application.

MARRIAGE.

While on duty in Westchester Co., Col. Burr became acquainted with Mrs. Theodosia (Bartow*) Prevost, a widow lady ten years his senior, and then the mother of two children. They were married by Rev. David Bogert, July 2, 1782. Mrs. Burr died of cancer in the spring of 1794. Their only child, Theodosia, was born June 23, 1783.

LAWYER AND POLITICIAN.

In 1780 Col. Burr studied law with Judge Paterson of Paterson, N. J., and next spring with Thomas Smith at Haverstraw. He began practice at Albany, but after the evacuation of the city, removed to New York. In 1784 he was elected to represent the city in the State Legislature, and soon made himself conspicuous by opposing and defeating the seven years apprenticeship bill. This was a bill to prevent any person from working at any mechanical craft or trade in the city who had not served an apprenticeship of seven years in the city. For opposing this bill he was threatened with mobbing. He also opposed the speculators' bill for seizing the public lands, and it was defeated. He was chairman of the committee of the House for revising the laws of the state.

In 1790 he was appointed attorney general of the state of New York. A great number and variety of claims arising out of the Revolutionary war were to be examined and adjusted. A board of commissioners, consisting of the state treasurer, comptroller and attorney general, was appointed. The latter as chairman drew up the report; no amendments were offered; its principles were adopted by other states, and it formed the basis of all future settlements with public creditors on account of the war.

THE MANHATTAN BANK.

In 1792 the New York banks had fallen under the control of an aristocracy, who as usual used and abused their privileges for their own benefit and the detriment of others. To break down this system of favoritism, Burr established the Manhattan Bank. Its charter was obtained by means of a stipulation to bring water into the city of New York. The law of the state made it impossible to get a direct charter for banking purposes. The water clause was an evasion. The company however laid wooden pipes, dug wells, built reservoirs and supplied the lower part of the city until the croton water came in. Some of its works, a reservoir, well and pump at the corner of Elm, Read and Center streets, supplying a steam engine, are still in operation to maintain the validity of its charter, which depends on its continuing a supply of water. As a bank it has survived all the financial storms of three-quarters of a century, and is to-day one of the most solid institutions in the country. This is that "fraudulent banking institution" alluded to in a malignant attack on the character of Burr in the Atlantic Monthly of April, 1858. A similar "fraudulent banking institution" was incorporated as late as 1820, under the name of the Chemical Bank of New York City, as a manufacturing company with banking privileges. To obtain the charter great stress was laid on the advantages to accrue to the city from the manufacture of chemicals, though banking and not manufacturing was the real purpose of the company. This bank has never suspended specie payment, and is the most successful institution of the kind in the United States.

THE HOLLAND LAND CO.

At this time Burr was charged with dishonesty in connection with the Holland Land Co., as well as with the Manhattan Co. A searching investigation failed to inculpate him. "By those who know me," he said, "it will never be credited that any man on earth would have the hardness even to propose to me dishonorable compensations." It was his connection with this company that led to his first duel.

THE FIRST DUEL.

Burr has been called a practiced and cold-blooded duelist; a sort of Lucius O'Trigger, always on the alert for a deadly quarrel and always sure to kill his man. The only duel he ever fought besides that with Hamilton was in the summer of 1799. John B. Church, a brother-in-law of Hamilton, had spoken with much freedom of the legislative services rendered by Burr to the Holland Land Co., greatly to the detriment of the good name of the latter. Burr challenged him, and they met at Hoboken, Sept. 2d. "Before leaving home Burr had particularly explained to his second, Judge Burke of So. Car., that the balls were cast too small for his pistols and that chamois leather, cut to the proper size and greased, must be put around them to make them fit. Leather and grease were placed in the case with the pistols. After the principals had been placed Burr noticed Judge Burke vainly endeavoring to drive in the ramrod with a stone and at once suspected that the grease had been forgotten. A moment afterwards the pistol was handed to him. With that singular coolness he was wont to exhibit at critical moments he drew the ramrod, felt the ball and told the Judge it was not home. "I know it," replied the second, wiping the perspiration from his face, "I forgot to grease the leather; but you see your man is ready; don't keep him waiting; just take a crack as it is: I'll grease the next." Shots were exchanged without effect, except that the ball from Mr. Church's pistol passed through Burr's coat. Mr. Church then made the requisite apology and the parties returned to the city in the highest good humor.—Parton's Life of Burr.

In 1791, he was nominated and confirmed by the Council one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the state, but declined. He was talked of this year as a candidate for Governor.

IN THE SENATE.

In Jan., 1791, he was elected to the U. S. Senate, in place of Gen. Schuyler, whose term expired in March. Rufus King was his colleague. Congress convened in Oct. 1791 and Washington made his annual communication to Congress. The Senate ordered Burr, Cabot and Johnson a committee to prepare and report a draft of an address; the next day Burr, as chairman of the committee, reported an answer which was adopted without alteration, an unusual occurrence. As a Senator, he was industrious and efficient on many important committees—generally as chairman.

During the winter of 1791-2 he spent much time in the state dept. in order to make himself familiar with foreign affairs, which he considered necessary to the faithful and useful performance of his duty; he labored at this until a peremptory order from Washington forbade his further examinations. At this period the Senate legislated with closed doors; Burr advocated and voted for opening the galleries to the public while so engaged. After much opposition this measure was finally carried, Feb. 2, 1794. At the second election of Washington Burr received one vote in the electoral college.

In 1794 Col. Burr was the choice of his party in the U. S. Senate and House as Minister to the French republic; the recall of Gen. Morris having been requested by the executive provisional council of the French republic on the ground that he was considered a monarchist. Mr. Madison, Mr. Monroe and another member of the House were delegated to convey their choice of Col. Burr to the President, and to request his appointment. Gen. Washington declined on the ground that he had not confidence in Colonel Burr's integrity. The committee retired. The Senate adhered unanimously to their choice, and the committee again waited upon the President, who replied with some warmth, that his decision was irrevocable, and offered to appoint Mr. Madison "or you, Mr. Monroe." The committee again retired. The democratic members were inflexible and would nominate no other person, nor make any other selection. The President appointed James Monroe, May 27, 1794.

In the Presidential election of 1796 (Adams and Jefferson) Burr received thirty electoral votes.

His senatorial term expired March 4, 1797, and next year he was again elected to the State Legislature and supported the law of 1799, by which slavery was to be ultimately abolished within the state of N. Y.

BURR'S "INTRIGUE" FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

There was great uncertainty and anxiety throughout the country respecting the presidential election of 1800. The result depended on New York and New York was doubtful. The democratic success was due to Burr. Through his efforts the democrats elected their city candidates for the assembly, which gave them a majority in that body and secured the state electors. The New York electors decided the issue in the electoral college, giving a majority to the democratic ticket—Jefferson and Burr—against the federal—Adams and Pinckney. The subsequent contest in the House resulted from the old rule (which continued in force until the passage of the 12th constitutional amendment) by which each elector voted for two persons and the candidate receiving the highest number of votes became President and next highest became Vice-President. There was no specific vote, as now, for President and for Vice-President. When the electoral votes were counted it was found that Jefferson and Burr had each received 73 votes, 70 being necessary. This tie devolved the election on the House of Representatives, voting by states, each state casting one vote. There were 16 states; 8 were for Jefferson, 6 for Burr, 2 divided, 9 necessary for a choice. The balloting began on the 9th of Feb. and continued seven days. The excitement was tremendous. Several days before the vote, Judge Morris writing to Hamilton says: "Excitement fearful, and my own position as a calm spectator difficult to support. You who are temperate in drinking have never perhaps noticed the awkward situation of a man who continues sober after all the rest of the company are drunk."

It was during these seven days of struggle and suspense that Burr is charged with intriguing to make himself President, against the rightful claimant Jefferson. "Burr and Jefferson were presented on equal terms and with equal claims before the House of Representatives. There were men of all parties who preferred Burr as a man fit alike for the cabinet or the field; who regarded his qualifications as superior to those of Jefferson, and believed that his administration of the government would be more vigorous and dignified than was to be expected of his undecided rival. Mr. Bayard of Delaware considered Burr the better man for the office. The federalists generally preferred Burr, believing him to be both a greater and a better man than Jefferson. The federalists were in the majority in the House and would have elected Burr on first ballot: he had in fact a numerical majority on every vote.

Burr's personal friends entreated him to decide the contest by pledging himself to them on certain points. This he refused to do, or to allow his friends to do. All (his friends) deny intriguing for Burr, not because it would have been wrong, but because it was untrue. Had he intrigued as claimed he would have been President."—Examination of Charges against the Political Conduct of Aaron Burr, by W. P. Van Ness,* N. Y., 1804.

*Judge W. P. Van Ness is called by Dr. Hammond, in his Political History of New York, one of the shrewdest and most sagacious men New York ever produced. He afterwards acted as Burr's second in the duel with Hamilton. Cornelius P. Van Ness, who was some time Collector of the port of New York and Governor of Vermont, was his brother. A daughter of Gov. Van Ness m. Judge Roosevelt of New York.

"At last," says Judge Van Ness, "Mr. Jefferson, through a friend, gave quieting assurances to the federalists in regard to certain points of state policy, and that certain federal officers should not be removed in case of his election, at which they withdrew their opposition and on the 36th ballot he was elected. Burr became Vice-President. All the time during this exciting contest he was in Albany, calmly attending to the preparations for his daughter's wedding.

THEODOSIA.

Theodosia, only child of Col. Aaron and Theodosia Burr, was b. June 23, 1783. She was carefully educated under the direct and constant supervision of her father. Besides the usual accomplishments she was proficient in the Greek, Latin, German and French languages, and familiar with the best works of ancient and modern writers. At the age of fourteen she presided at her father's mansion at Richmond Hill, and entertained his numerous and distinguished guests with charming grace and dignity. She was freely acknowledged the most beautiful and accomplished woman of her time. She m. at Albany, N. Y., 1801, Joseph, son of Hon. William* and Rebecca (Motte) Allston of South Carolina, b. 1778; educated a lawyer, but did not practice; for several yrs. a distinguished member of the So. Car. Leg.; Gen. of Militia; Gov. of So. Car., 1812-14; res. alternately on his estate near Charlestown and in the city. An only child, AARON BURR ALSTON, b. 1802.

AS PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

It is said he never had a superior. He was master of every rule, order or ceremony; cool, prompt, impartial; no high toned voice or sharp sentences; precise in attention to etiquette in its minutest point, and always dignified and courteous. For the trial of Judge Chase he arranged all the preliminaries, and presided in a manner that won universal applause. There were several persons in the audience who had seen portions of the trial of Warren Hastings, who declared that the Vice-President presided at the trial of Judge Chase with more dignity than the Lord Chancellor at the trial of the Gov. General of Bengal. The proceedings at this trial have been considered as authority ever since in all the states.

BURR AND HAMILTON.

In 1804 Col. Burr was a candidate for the office of Governor of the state of New York. Four years before he had been thought worthy by a numerical majority of the representatives of the people in Congress to occupy the highest place in the government of the United States, and he had in fact filled during that period its second highest place with transcendent ability and credit. The friends of Burr were confident of his election. Their chagrin and disappointment may be imagined when the result became known. Morgan Lewis was elected by 7,000 majority. Burr received about 28,000 votes. What was the cause of this sudden downfall? The friends of Burr ascribed it to the long continued, ceaseless and bitter attacks and groundless aspersions of Hamilton on the personal and private, as well as the public and political character of his rival. In 1792 Hamilton writes: "I fear that he (Burr) is unprincipled both as a public and a private man. * * * For or against anything as its suits his interest or ambition. * * * I am mistaken if it be not his object to play the game of conspiracy, and I feel it a religious duty to oppose his career." To Rufus King he wrote: "Mr. Burr's integrity as an individual is not unimpeached, and as a public man he is one of the worst sort. * * * In a word if you have an embryo Caesar in the United States it is Burr." To which Mr. King replied: "Care has been taken to put our friends at the eastward on their guard." It was believed that from the very beginning of his connection with the commander-in-chief as his private secretary, Hamilton had used his influence adversely to Burr. It was remembered that in 1794 Washington had refused to ratify the nomination of Burr as minister to France on the ground that he had not confidence in Col. Burr's integrity, though his integrity had never been questioned except by Hamilton and others for political effect. In 1798 when war with France seemed imminent, and an

It was decided to burn out the garrison, and Mrs. Motte supplied a fine bow and bundle of arrows for setting fire to the roof. The plan succeeded, the garrison capitulated, and the fire was extinguished with but little damage. She d. 1815 on her plantation on the Santee river. One of her daus. m. Gen. army was voted and general officers appointed by Congress, Col. Burr desired an appointment, and was again thwarted by Hamilton. John Adams, who was then President and desired to nominate Col. Burr as Brigadier General, writes as follows in 1815: "He (Burr) had served in the army and came out of it with the character of a knight without fear and an able officer. He had afterwards studied and practiced law with application and success. Buoyed up on their religious partialities and this military and judicial reputation, it is no wonder that Gov. Clinton and Chancellor Livingston should take notice of him. They made him Attorney General and the Legislature sent him to Congress, where I believe he served six years. At the next election he was however left out, and being at that time somewhat embarrassed in circumstances and reluctant to return to the bar, he would have rejoiced in an appointment in the army. In this situation I proposed to Washington and through him to the triumvirate (Washington, Hamilton and Pinckney) to nominate Col. Burr for a Brigadier General. Washington's answer to me was: 'By all that I have known and heard, Col. Burr is a brave and able officer; but the question is whether he has not equal talents at intrigue.' How shall I describe to you my sensations at that moment. He had compelled me to promote over the heads of Lincoln, Clinton, Gates, Knox and others, and even over Pinckney, one of his own triumvirate (Hamilton), the most restless, impatient, artful, indefatigable and unprincipled intriguer in the United States, if not in the world, to be second in command under himself, and now dreaded an intriguer in a poor brigadier. He did however propose it at least to Hamilton. But I was not permitted to nominate Burr. If I had been what would have been the consequences? Shall I say that Hamilton would have been now alive, and Hamilton and Burr now at the head of affairs. What then? If I had nominated Burr without the consent of the triumvirate a negative in the Senate was certain."

In the contest for President in 1800, Hamilton frightened at the seeming possibility of Burr becoming President, grew still more bitter and denunciatory. To Wolcott he wrote, "he will employ the rogues of all parties to overrule the good men of all parties, and to prosecute projects which wise men of every description will disapprove. These things are to be inferred with moral certainty from the character of the man. Every step in his career proves that he has formed himself upon the model of Cataline, and that he is too cold-blooded and too determined a conspirator ever to change his plan. * * * * * Adieu to the Federal Troy if they once introduce this Grecian horse into their citadel." The same year he wrote to Senator Bayard of Delaware, "Burr will certainly attempt to reform the Government a la Bonaparte. He is as unprincipled and dangerous a man as any country can boast. As true a Cataline as ever met in midnight conclave."

"In personal intercourse Hamilton was still more busy and bitter in defamation of Burr, and his utterances thrown broadcast over the country and repeated in ten thousand forms, began to tell upon the reputation and popularity of his victim. At the commencement of his term of office as Vice-President, he was at the height of his personal popularity, influence and glory; before the close of 1804, he was suspected, contemned, derided and prostrate and this mighty revolution was effected without any wrong act on his part, and in spite of the unprecedented ability he had displayed as President of the Senate."—Davis. Hamilton was not alone in this work. Jefferson felt a deep resentment against Burr for having allowed himself to be voted for in the House of Representatives for President; and Judge VanNess dates the hatred and enmity of the Clinton family from the same period. Of the latter, Judge VanNess says: "Conscious of the iniquity of their motives and designs, in darkness they have made their attacks and like cowards set to blast his reputation. One in confidential whispers would hazard insinuations calculated to excite resentments. Another would whisper into the ear of a friend, hearsays with qualifications and much apparent solicitude as to the degree of truth to be attached to them. In these tortuous and hidden courses have they pursued the character of a man, whose energy and talent they dreaded, and in whose presence they humbly acknowledged their inferiority." Burr paid no attention to the course of Hamilton until 1802, when he sought an interview and explanation. The latter admitted that in the heat of political discussion he had spoken hastily of Burr, and in terms not usual with gentlemen, and promised amendment in the future. But in 1804 when Burr ran for Governor of New York, Hamilton was more violent and bitter than ever. But for these open and secret attacks on his character Burr would have been elected. Then came the letter of Dr. Cooper in which Hamilton was reported as expressing "a despicable opinion" and "a still more despicable opinion of Col. Burr." The latter stung by defeat, misrepresentation and abuse, believing Hamilton to be the author, instigator, or encourager of these attacks, and urged on by his friends who had long since come to the conclusion that Burr's forbearance had ceased to be a virtue; he demanded of Hamilton a disavowal of responsibility for the offensive clause in Dr. Cooper's letter. In the correspondence which ensued Hamilton declined to disavow his responsibility in general or particular. Burr's last communication to Hamilton, borne by Burr's friend, Judge W. P. VanNess, who acted as Burr's second in the duel, clearly and forcibly expresses his own views and feelings in regard to the general conduct of Hamilton towards himself.

"Far from conceding that rivalryship authorizes a latitude not otherwise justifiable, Mr. Burr feels greater delicacy in such cases and would think it a meanness to speak of a rival but in terms of respect; just to their merits; silent to their foibles. Such has been invariably his conduct to Jay, Adams and Hamilton, the only three who can be supposed to have stood in that relation to him. That he has too much reason to believe that in regard to Mr. Hamilton there has been no reciprocity. For several years his name has been lent to the support of base slanders which he has never had the generosity, the magnanimity or the candor to contradict or disavow. Mr. Burr forbears to particularize, as it could only tend to produce new irritations; but having made great sacrifices for the sake of harmony; having exercised forbearance until it approximates to humiliation, he has seen no effect produced by such conduct, but a repetition of injury, he is obliged to conclude, that there is on the part of Mr. Hamilton a settled and irrepressible malevolence; that he would never cease in his conduct towards Mr. Burr to violate the courtesies of life, and that henceforth he has no alternative but to announce these things to the world, which consistently with Mr. Burr's ideas of propriety can be done in no other way than that which he has adopted. He is incapable of revenge; still less is he capable of imitating the conduct of Mr. Hamilton by countenancing secret depredations on his fame and character. But these things must have an end."

THE DUEL.

The meeting took place Wednesday, July 11, at 7 a. m. Hamilton* was mortally wounded at the first fire, and died the next afternoon.

The consequences of this event to Burr were such as never before or since have been visited upon the survivor of a duel. Torrents of popular odium, thousands of absurd falsehoods, a jury of inquest, a verdict of murder, a grand jury indictment, and an indignation that followed him everywhere and seemed to grow more intense with the lapse of time, to the end of his life. Duelling is indefensible, absurd and wicked, and were it always followed by such consequences to the survivor, it would soon come to an end; but why the challenger in this affair was worse than others it is difficult to see. Burr never ceased to justify himself, but maintained to the end, that it was unavoidable and that Hamilton justly merited his fate.

"Once only in his life, and near its close, he visited the duelling ground at Weehawken at the request of, and in company with a friend. On reaching the scene he placed his companion where Hamilton had stood and went to the place where he had stood himself and proceeded to narrate the incidents of the occasion. The conversation turned upon the causes of the duel. As he talked, the old fire seemed to be rekindled within him. His eye blazed; his voice rose. He recounted the long catalogue of wrongs he had received from Hamilton, and told how he had forborne and forborne and forgiven and forgiven, and even stooped to remonstrate; until he had no choice except to slink out of sight, a wretch, degraded and despised, or meet the calumniator on the field, and silence him. He dwelt much on the meanness of Hamilton. He charged him with being malevolent and cowardly; a man who would slander a rival and not stand to it, unless he was cornered. 'When he stood up to fire,' said Burr, 'he caught my eye and quailed

When 13 yrs. of age, he became clerk for Nicholas Cruver, a merchant of St. Croix, but was too ambitious to be satisfied with such a career, and in 1772 went to N. Y. C. and studied in Columbia Col. In 1774 became Capt. of Artillery. Was at the battle of Long Island, and accompanied Washington (by whom he was appointed his aid-de-camp, and private secretary) on his retreat through New Jersey. under it; he looked like a convicted felon.' 'It was not true,' he continued, 'that Hamilton did not fire at him; Hamilton fired first; he heard the ball whistle among the branches and saw the severed twig above his head. He spoke of what Hamilton wrote on the evening before the duel, with infinite contempt. 'It reads' said he, 'like the confession of a penitent monk.' These isolated expressions, my informant says, convey no idea whatever of the fiery impressiveness with which he spoke. He justified all he had done—nay applauded it. He was moved to the depths of his soul. The pent-up feelings of twenty-five years burst into speech. His companion who had known him intimately many years, and had never seen him aroused before, was almost awe-struck by this strange outburst of emotion, and the startling force of many of his expressions. He remembers wondering that he could ever have thought Burr small of stature, for during this scene the loftiness of his demeanor was such that his very form seemed to rise and expand. It was long before he regained his usual composure. All the way home he still spoke of the olden time and seemed to renew his youth, and live over again his former life."—Parton's Life of Burr.

FAREWELL TO THE SENATE.

After the duel he journeyed until the meeting of Congress in autumn, and took his seat as Pres. of the Senate, exhibiting the same composure and firmness of nerve as ever. During the remainder of his term nothing of importance occurred. On Saturday, March 2d, 1805, he took leave of the Senate in an address which was said to be the most dignified, sublime and imposing that was ever uttered. The whole Senate was in tears and so unmannered that it was half an hour before they could sufficiently recover themselves to come to order and choose a Vice-Pres. pro tem. On the Monday morning following, two Senators in conversation were relating this circumstance. One of them said that he wished the tradition might be preserved as one of the most extraordinary events he had ever witnessed. Another Senator, who was asked how long Burr spoke, could form no idea: "It might have been half an hour, and it might have been but a moment. When he came to his senses he seemed to have awakened as from a kind of trance." Burr himself, in alluding to this address, said: "There was nothing written or prepared, except that it had been some days in my mind to say something. It was the solemnity, the anxiety, the expectation and the interest which I saw strongly imprinted on the countenances of the auditors that inspired whatever was said. I did not shed tears nor assume tenderness, but tears did flow abundantly."

THE MEXICAN PROJECT.

The retirement of Burr from the Senate closed his political career. All hope of further advancement or even of employment in his own country was at an end. He could not remain inactive. He turned his attention to Mexico and formed a scheme to establish a stable government in that country, with himself at its head. It was a grand design, and had it succeeded would in all human probability have been a happy change in the history of that distracted country. Many prominent men joined him, among them Generals Adair and Dayton, Col. Comfort Tyler and Col., afterwards Gen. Zebulon Pike. Before the cession of Louisiana to France (1800) Baron Bastrop had contracted with the Spanish Govt. for about forty miles square of land near Nachitoches. Afterwards Col. Chas. Lynch agreed with Bastrop for a six-tenths interest; and Burr bought of Lynch for $50,000 one-half of his interest. Burr's purchase consisted of 400,000 acres. It was designed to colonize on these lands as a base of operations.

BLANNERHASSETT.

On his way to New Orleans in 1805 Burr paid a visit to Herman Blannerhassett, who was living with his wife on a lonely island in the Ohio river. He was b. in England in 1767; of Irish descent; grad. Univ. of Dublin; admitted to practice at the bar; m. Adeline Agnew, dau. of Gen. Agnew, who was with Wolfe at Quebec. Becoming tired of civilized society in the old world and possessing fortune and leisure, he sought to realize an ideal of sylvan happiness in the new. He came to N. Y. city in 1796, and thence to Marietta, O., where he bought the island since called by his name. It lies a few miles below Marietta and contains about 360 acres. He purchased one-half of it, for which he paid $5,000. In 1798 he began improving it and bought a library and chemical apparatus, and philosophical instruments. He had no idea of values and was taken advantage of by everyone. His improvements cost $40,000, which was a great deal more than they were worth. He lived in this solitude seven years. At the time of Burr's visit he was deeply in debt and had become utterly tired of his lonely, monotonous, inactive and purposeless existence. He therefore eagerly availed himself of the opportunity afforded by the enterprise of Burr to escape at the same time from his creditors and his irksome situation. His subsequent losses and troubles, so far as they resulted from this affair, are due to Mr. Jefferson, whose interference caused the scheme to fail. After the arrest of Burr, Blannerhasset resided on a cotton plantation in Miss.; thence removed North to educate his children. In Canada, he practised law awhile. In 1831 reën. to England and d. on the Island of Guernsey, in the 63d year of his age. His widow returned to the U. S., brought claims against the government, and in 1842 was residing in N. Y. C., while prosecuting her claims. She was then very poor and lived on the charity of friends. Out of this material Wm. Wirt made up the pathetic story, which is printed in the school books as a reading lesson for children. It pictures the island as an earthly paradise, and the Blannerhassetts innocent and happy as our first parents before the fall, until the evil one, in the shape of Burr, intruded into this new Eden, and with satanic art, poisoned their minds with discontent and vain ambition and lured them on to ruin.

In the summer of 1806 about forty men assembled at the island and in the fall proceeded down the river to the mouth of the Cumberland, where the party increased to about one hundred men, with Burr in command, went on to a point near Natchez where, in consequence of the hostility of the administration, the expedition was abandoned.

ARREST AND TRIAL.

After giving up the expedition, Col. Burr made his way across the country as far as the Tombigbee river in the Miss. Territory, where he was illegally arrested (Feb. 19, 1807) by a military force acting under the orders of Mr. Jefferson. Thence carried to Richmond, Va., indicted for treason, and tried. The trial lasted seven months. John Marshall, Chief Justice of the U. S., presided. John Randolph, of Roanoke, was foreman of the jury. William Wirt, whose turgid eloquence used to adorn our school books, McRae, and Geo. Hay, U. S. Attorney, conducted the prosecution. Burr conducted his own case assisted by Baker, Botts, and Luther Martin. The reports fill two volumes. It is a cause celebre. The most strenuous efforts were made to secure his conviction. Parties were urged to tell Judge Marshall that the administration demanded it. "Tell him that," said one who better understood the character of that great man, "You might as well tell him that the administration demanded that the sun should stand still." Burr was acquitted. After this he was held under a bail bond of $3,000 to appear in Ohio on a charge of originating a secret movement in that State against Mexico. He never appeared.

IN EUROPE.

Soon after his acquittal at Richmond, he went to England with the object of engaging the British government in the emancipation of Mexico from Spain, and began negotiations with some prospect of success. But the year 1807 saw the culmination of the power of Napoleon who, from a Lieut. of Artillery, had in a few years made himself the master of Europe. And the British Gov. took alarm at the military reputation of Burr, who it was apprehended might run a similar career in South America. He was therefore warned to leave the country, and requested to name the place to which he would go. He suggested France, then Ireland, then Russia or South America; No! The ministry then named Heligoland, a barren island in the German ocean. Burr positively refused to go, and declared that the British nation had not power to carry him there alive. Sweden was determined on. While in England he was for some time the guest of Jeremy Bentham, and they entertained for each other a high admiration. At Stockholm he was received in the first circles, and for six months enjoyed himself without disturbance. From Sweden he proceeded to Germany, thence to Scotland, Holland and Paris, and was everywhere received with marked distinction and kindness. The literary and scientific circles of Paris treated him with especial consideration, and Denon, the celebrated traveler, and then director of the Napoleon Museum, gave him free admission to all the institutions under his control. By the government, however, he was viewed with jealousy, and was detained in Paris nearly a year, almost without hope of release. During this period he was often reduced to the greatest straits. His funds were exhausted. No remittances or letters arrived from America. A few entries from his journal show the extent of his destitution:

"Nov. 23, 1810, nothing from America, and really I shall starve. Borrowed three francs to-day. Four or five little debts keep me in constant alarm. Altogether about two louis."

"Dec. 1, 1810, Mr. — came upon me this morning just as I was out of bed, for 27 livres; paid him, which took literally my last sous."

"When at Denon's I thought I might as well go to Palasgie; set off, but recollected that I owed the woman who sits in passage two sous for a cigar; so turned about to pursue my way by the Pont des Arts, remembered that I had not wherewith to pay the toll, being one sou; had to go all the way round by Port Royal, more than half a mile."

Once he was unexpectedly relieved by the Duke of Bassano, through the aid of Denon. At another time, to avoid starvation, he translated from English into French two octavo volumes which cost him three months of hard work, and for which he received one hundred louis (about $364). "Better," he says, "than to starve. The curious part of the story is, the book contains a quantity of abuse and libels on Aaron Burr."

In addition to this he was subjected to insults and meannesses from American officials and sojourners in Paris which are sickening to relate. (See Journal and Correspondence).

He at last got permission to leave the country, and crossing the channel to England, set sail June 8, 1812, and landed at Boston.

MR. MASON HAD WITHDRAWN FROM COMMERCE.

His first experience in Boston was a mild foretaste of the treatment that awaited him in his native land. He was in destitute circumstances. Among his effects were some valuable books which he had bought in Europe. Mr. Jonathan Mason, an old classmate and retired merchant was then living in Boston, and to him Col. Burr offered these books for sale, or, if preferred, as security for a loan. Mr. P., who bore Burr's message, was requested by Mason to inform the gentleman that he had withdrawn from commerce, and that it was not convenient to make advances.

ANTICIPATION—THEODOSIA—GAMP.

Of all the forms of human love, one of the tenderest, strongest and most beautiful is that of a father for his daughter. Theodosia was an only child. Losing her mother in childhood, without brother or sister, her father had filled the place at once of father, mother, companion and teacher. Despising as he did the vain accomplishments and frivolous pursuits of the fashionable women of his day, and having a lofty ideal of the possibilities of female culture and development, he sought to realize in Theodosia his ideal, and to show the world what a well educated woman should be. How well he succeeded is already known.

In South Carolina she maintained her place at the head of society with dignity, but without hateur, caprice or vanity. She was considered a model of purity, intelligence and loveliness. In making Theodosia lovely and amiable, her father had made her capable of loving and admiring whatever was worthy in others. She admired and loved her father, and none knew him better. She compared him with others. "Often," she says, "after reflecting on this subject, you appear to me so superior, so elevated above all other men, I contemplate you with such a strong mixture of humility, admiration, reverence, love and pride that very little superstition would be necessary to make me worship you as a superior being, such enthusiasm does your character excite in me. When I afterwards revert to myself how insignificant do my best qualities appear. My vanity would be greater had I not been placed so near you; and yet my pride is in our relationship." The abuse, slander and odium incessantly heaped upon him served but to intensify her admiration and love, and to arouse within her a sublime devotion capable of any sacrifice for his sake. "Indeed," she writes, "I witness your extraordinary fortune with new wonder at every new misfortune. Brave the storm; if the worst comes, I will leave everything to suffer with you. I would rather not live than not be the daughter of such a man." He was sure then of one welcome in America, one door was open to him. Associated with Theodosia in all his thoughts was his little grandson, Aaron Burr Alston, of whom he never spoke but with an endearing diminutive. The first lisping effort of this boy to pronounce the word "grandpa" resulted in "gamp," and ever afterwards Burr called himself and this boy "Gamp" indiscriminately.

Theodosia was in South Carolina; she was to meet her father in New York. He came on by water from Boston, and when off Mill River on Long Island Sound he makes the following entry in his journal: "July 5, 1812.—The wind fell last evening, and the night was calm and perfectly clear; such a sky as I never saw in England or France. I passed some hours on deck admiring the brilliancy of the stars, following their majestic march through infinite space, and tracing the hand of Omnipotence. Presumptuous aim!

Yet there is a charm in such contemplation of which you (Theodosia) know all the luxury. It is only you whose society I could endure on such an occasion. Yes, and my dear little Gamp to introduce to his opening mind the wonders of nature and the soul."

Mrs. Alston, in one of her letters to her father, writes: "My son is at times seized with a singular kind of torpor—a heavy listlessness which is impossible to remove. These fits do not last above a day at a time. He is naturally lively." On one occasion he had greatly pleased his grandfather by an exhibition of extraordinary courage in one so young. He was regarded as an unusually interesting and promising child. Five days before (June 30, 1812) the entry quoted above he died in So. Car. of fever, and was then in his grave.

The health of Mrs. Alston had been delicate for some years. As early as 1805, apprehensive of an early death, she had prepared a letter to be given to Mr. Alston after her decease. It is in the nature of a will, and was found among her papers. Though intended only for the eye of her husband, it breathes a spirit so solemn, tender and affectionate, and portrays so unconsciously her sweet, delicate and noble nature, that it would be wrong to withhold it.

THEODOSIA'S WILL.

Aug. 6, 1805. Theodosia to Joseph Alston. "Whether it is the effect of extreme debility and disordered nerves, or whether it is a real presentiment of the existence of which I have been often told and always doubted, I cannot tell; but something whispers me that my end approaches. In vain I reason with myself; in vain I occupy my mind and seek to fix my attention on other subjects; there is about me that dreadful heaviness and sinking of heart; that awful foreboding of which it is impossible to divest myself. Perhaps I am now standing on the brink of eternity, and ere I plunge into the fearful abyss I have some few requests to make.

"I wish your sister, one of them; it is immaterial which, would select from my clothes certain things which they will easily perceive belonged to my mother. These, with whatever lace they may find in a large trunk in a garret room of the Oaks house, added to a little satin-wood box (the largest, and having a lock and key) and a black satin embroidered box with a pin cushion; all these things I wish they would put together in one trunk and send them to Fred., with the enclosed letter. I prefer him, because Bartow's wife would have little respect for what, however trifling it may appear, I nevertheless deem sacred. I beg sister Maria will accept of my watch ring. She will find a locket which she gave me containing the hair of her mother. She had better take it. If the lace in my wardrobe at the Oaks will be of any use to Charlotte, I beg she will take it, or anything else she wishes. My heart is with those dear amiable sisters to give them something worth preserving in recollection of me; but they know that a warm friendship is all I have to give.

Return to mamma the eagle she gave me. Should the opportunity to Catharine Brown ever occur, send her a pearl necklace, a small diamond ring, a little pair of coral tablets, which are among my trinkets at the Oaks. I pray you, my dear husband, send Bartow's daughter some present for me, and to himself and Frederick a lock of my hair. Return Natalie the little desk she gave me, accompanied by assurances of my affectionate recollection, and a ring of my hair. Remember me to Sally, who is truly amiable and whom I truly esteem.

I beg also you will write immediately to New York, forwarding some money for the comfortable support of Peggy, until my father can provide for her. Do not permit grief at the loss of me to render you forgetful of this, for the poor creature may expire of want in the meantime. I beg this thing may be attended to without delay.

To you, my beloved husband, I leave our child; the child of my bosom and who was once a part of myself, and from whom I shall shortly be separated by the cold grave. You love him now, henceforth love him for me also. And oh, my husband, attend to the last prayer of a doting mother; never, never listen to what any other person tells you of him. Be yourself his judge on all occasions. He has his faults; see them and correct them yourself. Desist not an instant in your endeavors to secure his confidence. It is a work which requires uniformity of conduct as well as wealth of affection towards him. I know, my beloved, that you can foresee what is right on this subject as on every other. But recollect these are the last words I can ever utter. It will tranquilize my last moments to have disburdened myself of them.

I feel you will be scarcely able to read this scrawl, but I feel hurried and agitated. Death is not welcome to me. I confess it is even dreaded. You have made me too fond of life. Adieu, then, thou kind, thou tender husband. Adieu, friend of my heart. May heaven preserve you and may we meet hereafter. Adieu! perhaps we may never see each other again in this world. You are away; I wished to hold you fast and prevent you from going this morning; but He who is wisdom itself orders events; we must submit to them. Least of all should I murmur; I, on whom so many blessings have been showered; whose days have been numbered by bounties; who have had such a husband; such a child and such a father. Oh! pardon me, my God, if I regret to leave them; I resign myself. Adieu! once more, and for the last time, my beloved. Speak of me often to our son; let him love the memory of his mother and let him know how he was loved by her, your wife, your fond wife, Theodosia. Let my father see my son, sometimes. Do not be unkind towards him, whom I have loved so much, I beseech you. Burn all my papers, except my father's letters, which I beg you return him. Adieu, my sweet boy; love your father; be grateful and affectionate to him while he lives; be the pride of his meridian, the support of his declining days; be all that he wishes, for he made your mother happy. Oh, my Heavenly Father, bless them both. If it is permitted I will hover round you and guard you, and intercede for you. I hope for happiness in the next world, for I have not been bad in this.

"I had nearly forgotten to say that I charge you not to allow me to be stripped and washed, as is usual; I am pure enough thus to return to dust. Why then expose my person? Pray see to this. If it does not appear contradictory or silly, I beg to be kept as long as possible before I am consigned to the earth."

(Directed: "My husband; to be delivered after my death; I wish this to be read immediately before my burial.")

THE LAST JOURNEY.

By the death of her son Mrs. Alston was greatly prostrated. She longed to meet her father. Under date Aug. 12, 1812, she wrote: "I wish to see you and will leave this as soon as possible. I could not go alone by land for our coachman is a great drunkard and requires the presence of a master, and my husband is obliged to wait for a military court of inquiry." On the 30th of Dec., 1812, she embarked at Georgetown, S. C., on the schooner Patriot for New York. The vessel did not arrive. For months her father waited in an agony of suspense. In letters to Gov. Alston he entreated him to give some hope; that the vessel had put into some port and would yet be heard from. No tidings ever came. Hope slowly gave way to despair. From this blow he never recovered.

At the time it was commonly supposed that the vessel foundered at sea in a heavy gale a few days after leaving port. Many believed that she had been captured by pirates, who infested southern waters, and her crew and passengers murdered. In 1879 a New York city newspaper contained the following extract, taken from the Washington Post:

THEODOSIA BURR'S FATE—THE ALLEGED CONFESSION OF A PENITENT OLD PIRATE.

I see by the Chicago Inter-Ocean of June 28, and the Chicago Times of July 7, that the mystery connected with the death of Theodosia Burr Alston has been again brought to public notice. As the article in these papers was taken from the Post, I write to you because my story corroborates it.

In 1850 an old man, who, years before, had been a sailor, an occupant of the Cass county poorhouse, Cassopolis, Mich., in conversing with a lady, the wife of a Methodist minister, about his past life, filled with wrong-doing and crime, said that the act which caused him the most remorse was the tipping of the plank on which Mrs. Alston, the daughter of Aaron Burr, walked into the ocean.

Said he: "I was a sailor on a pirate vessel. We captured the vessel in which this lady was. When told she must walk the plank into the ocean she asked for a few moments alone, which was granted. She came forward when told her time had expired, dressed beautifully in white, the loveliest woman I had ever seen. Calmly she stepped upon the plank. With eyes raised to the heavens, and hands crossed reverently upon her bosom, she walked slowly and firmly into the ocean without an apparent tremor. Had I refused to perform my work, as I wish with all my heart I had, my death would have been sure and certain."

This is the testimony of an almost dying man, the confession of the most terrible act of his life. It seems to me when an old man, bemoaning his life, filled with sin, makes such a confession without any other provocation whatever than the unburdening of his soul during his preparation for another life—for death came soon after—that there must be truth in his statement.

The lady to whom the confession was made, repeated to my grandmother, whose maiden name was Mary Edwards, and who was a cousin of Aaron Burr, the story as I have told it, as she had frequently heard her speak of the mystery concerning the death of Mrs. Alston.

STELLA A. DRAKE.

STURGIS, St. Jo County, Mich., July 27.

After the death of his wife and son a settled despondency took possession of Mr. Alston, from which nothing could arouse him. He d. at Charleston, S. C., Sept. 10, 1816, a. 38 years.

RESUMES PRACTICE.

Soon after his arrival in New York Col. Burr opened a law office; though something like a combination appeared to be forming against his returning to the bar. But the more honorable members of the profession refused to join it, and among others who spurned this conspiracy to starve him, was Cadwalder D. Colden. The great reputation of Burr as a lawyer, his familiarity with records, the ancestry of prominent families and the tenure of titles, secured for him at once a large and profitable business. He was employed on almost every land case on the docket, and his income was so considerable, that he might have acquired a fortune but for his excessive liberality and carelessness in the use of money. For many years Luther Martin was his guest. To the needy around him, he acted as if he were the guardian trustee of a large partimony for their benefit; while he lived abstemiously and slept on a settee, uncomfortable enough for a friar of La Trappe. The remaining years of his life though many, are soon told, though a volume of exceeding interest might be filled with anecdotes relating to this period.

OSTRACISM.

He was unpopular. His business fell off. He used to pass whole days in his lonely and dingy office in Reade street, with head sunk upon his breast, apparently absorbed in melancholy reflections. When he walked the streets he acquired the habit of looking up furtively without raising his head to see if the approaching acquaintance meant to cut him, which was generally the intention. The Rev. Gardner Sping, D. D., cautioned his father not to call on Burr as he had lost caste. It was a period of almost complete loneliness, of mournful memories, and of social ostracism, which, however, did not embitter his feelings. There is a touch of pity, not unmingled with admiration, in the account given by William H. Seward of an interview he had with Burr in 1831. They were opposing counsel in a chancery suit, and the call was for the purpose of arranging the time. Mr. Seward tells the story in a letter to Mrs. Seward. "He (Burr) was at the Merchants' Exchange (Albany), one of the fourth class houses of the city. I could not but think as I ascended the narrow dirty staircase to his lodging in a small two bedded room in the upper story, of the contrast between his present state and that he enjoyed when he contended so long, even-handed, with Jefferson for the presidential chair on the second election after the retirement of Washington. He has lost property, fame, character and honor. Once so gay, so fashionable in his dress, so fascinating in his manners, so glorious in his eloquence and so mighty in his influence, how altered did he seem as he met me, drawing a coarse woolen surtout over his other clothes, his coarse cotton shirt and cravat; struggling by the form of modern fashions to display the proud spirit of the wearer; his few gray hairs just filled with powder, put on as thickly as paste, wet down and smoothed over his head, his form shrivelled into the dimensions almost of a dwarf; his voice forgetful of its former melody; while naught remained to express the daring spirit of his youth, but his keen, brilliant dark eye. He approached me with the air and demeanor of a gentleman of the old school, and as I shook his shrivelled and trembling hand, I felt a thousand recollections come to my mind of a most unpleasant nature."

MADAM JUMEL.*

Towards the last Burr became apprehensive of complete desertion and homelessness, and under the influence of this fear, he married Madam Jumel, for whom he had

* About 200 years ago Kiersted, a Hollander, owned a rough farm on Harlem Heights. From his heirs it passed to a Mr. Corroll. A few years before the revolution Col. Geo. Morris, who had been aide-de-camp to Gen. Braddock and an intimate friend of Col. Geo. Washington, bought it. In 1756 Washington and Morris visited N. Y. and were entertained at the house of Mrs. Beverly (Phillips) Robinson. Her beautiful and accomplished sister, Mary Phillips was with her at the time; Washington fell in love with Mary and it is said, proposed marriage and was flatly refused. In 1758 she m. Col. Morris. About this time Col. Morris built the mansion which afterwards became the Jumel residence. A part of the land was taken years ago for the High Bridge reservoir and park, the Croton Aqueduct and 10th avenue. Col. Morris, Beverly Robinson and the Phillipses were loyalists, and after the war done some law business. The ceremony took place just fifty years from his first marriage, and was performed by the same clergyman officiating on that occasion, Rev. Dr. Bogert. Burr was in the 78th year of his age. The new married pair made a short tour in Conn., and visited Henry W. Edwards, then Gov. of Conn., and residing in New Haven. The union was of short duration. A disagreement about money matters led to a separation and he was again homeless. For two or three years before his death he suffered from the effects of paralysis, and finally became incapable of moving about or even of dressing himself, though his mind retained much of its vigor, and his memory as to events of long standing unimpaired.

THE LAST FRIEND.

In this extremity Burr found his last friend. Nearly sixty years before he had met at the rivulet near Quebec a Scotch officer of the British army, and had generously shared with him a piece of horse's tongue—a priceless luxury. This officer was the father of Burr's last friend. He had passed away. His daughter had married Joshua Webb and had become a widow in straightened circumstances, and was keeping boarders in the old Jay house at the lower end of Broadway, N. Y. Burr became—to use her own words—her “honored guest.” The back-biters and slanderers were still busy.

“What,” said she to him, “do you think I have heard this morning? They say I am your daughter.”

“Well,” he answered, “we do not care for that; do we?”

“Not a bit,” was her reply. “But they say something else, Colonel; they say I was your mistress.”

“Do they?” said he. “I don't think we care much for that either, do we?”

“They must say what they choose,” she replied.

“They say! They say!! They say!!! Never, my child, use that word! There is a three fold death in the slanderer's tongue. It kills him who utters it, him who is the subject of it, and him who receives it! But,” said he, taking her hand in both his and lifting it to his lips, his hands shaking with paralysis, “I'll tell you something they might say that would be true. Let them say this of you: ‘She gave the old man a home when nobody else would.’” He uttered these words with an emphasis so tender and penetrating that two of his relatives who was present, one a member of the bar and the other a judge, could not refrain from tears. He was never a great talker, and in the decline of his life retained much of that dignified sedateness which had characterized his meridian. When visited by strangers he received them with courtesy, unless his pride became awakened by a suspicion of idle or impertinent curiosity; then he became formal, cold and repelling. The old Jay house was pulled down in the summer of 1836, and early in the season Burr was removed to Richmond on Staten Island.

AT REST.

Under sufferings of body or mind he seldom complained; but towards the last he became restless and impatient. The friends of his youth had all gone before him. All

Col. Morris took his family to England and his property in this country was confiscated. He died in England in 1794, a. 67. His wife died 1825, a. 96. The confiscation did not destroy the rights of the children, and in 1809 Capt. Harry Gage Morris of the Royal Navy, sold his rights to John Jacob Astor for $100,000, who in turn received $500,000 for the property from the State of New York. Confiscated estates had much to do with Astor's early success.

Eliza Bowen was born at sea in 1773, of unknown paternity. The infant was cared for by the Capt. of the vessel until forced by stress of weather into Newport harbor, R. I. She was given to Mrs. Thompson of that place, who brought up the waif and gave her a fine education. She was known as Miss Capet. When about 17 she eloped with Capt. Las Croix and went to N. Y. Of him nothing more is known. In N. Y. society she immediately became a favorite and famous. Old Ben Franklin called her his “fairy queen.” Patrick Henry caught fire and so on. At some period before her 2d m. she is said to have had an illegitimate son, who was known as Geo. Washington Bowen, and who claimed an exalted paternity and figured as a claimant for the Jumel property in subsequent law suits.

Stephen Jumel, b. in France; went young to St. Domingo; was there a planter and narrowly escaped the massacre of 1793; went to St. Helena, thence to N. Y. C. Became a merchant; made money; bought the Morris est. and mansion in 1810; m. Eliza Bowen and in 1815 settled the house and 30 acres on his wife, to be hers forever. Jumel bought other parcels from time to time and eventually owned a very large tract in the upper part of Manhattan Island. They went to France, set up a grand establishment and made a stir in society. Lafayette was her friend. Talleyrand was charmed with her and all the Bourbons were pleased. Napoleon was at St. Helena. By-and-bye, money getting scarce, they returned to N. Y., and Jumel, who seems to have lost his energy, was replaced by Madame, who took hold of business, bought and sold houses and lots and made money rapidly. In May, 1822, Jumel was thrown from his carriage and d. on the 22d. He was a large and very handsome man. He left no children. Ten years afterwards the wid. m. Col. Burr. She d. July 15, 1865, in her 92d year. The Jumel property increased enormously in value and became the object of litigation among a variety of claimants. The case was in the courts for many years and employed at one time and another several of the most eminent lawyers in the country. Quite recently it was settled by a decree of the U. S. Supreme Court.

the ties which united him to the world were severed. There remained to him no sister, no brother, no child. His years were four score. He was helpless and utterly dependent. He seemed anxious for the hour when his eyes should be closed in everlasting sleep. At length that hour came, and he died as calmly as if falling into a gentle slumber. In conformity with his wish his body was taken to Princeton, N. J., and buried near the graves of his grandfathers, Pres. Burr and Edwards. The funeral was attended by a military escort, the President, professors and students of the college and a large concourse of citizens. The President, Dr. Carnahan, preached a brief funeral sermon. Some years afterwards a marble monument was erected over his remains by his kinsman, Judge Ogden Edwards, who had also attended to his wants during his last sickness. It bears this inscription: "Aaron Burr, born Feb. 6, 1756; died Sept. 14, 1836. A Colonel in the army of the Revolution; Vice-President of the United States from 1801 to 1805."

CONCLUSION.

In person he was about five feet six inches in height, well formed and erect, with a military air, and mein lofty, polished and courtly. In the drawing room peculiarly graceful, and his whole manner unconsciously fascinating. His features were regular, and generally considered handsome; eyes jet black and exceedingly brilliant. His conversational powers were remarkable. He was regarded as the head of the bar, Hamilton his only rival. When engaged on the same side, as they often were, he always gave the latter his choice of place in the case. As a speaker he was "sententious and vivid, argumentative, short and pithy; no parade of fancy, metaphor or impassioned sentences are to be found in his speeches." Another describes him: "Of all lawyers, Burr was the most difficult to follow in the way of taking notes; very concise, every word the right one, no repetitions. Style unique, brief, quiet, very dignified; enunciation slow, distinct, very emphatic, always self-possessed; anything but declamatory, and more resembled an elevated tone of conversation, in which, without apparent effort or design, a man expresses his ideas in measured and beautiful language in some small and select circle, dislodging their own opinions on any particular subject, and fixing his own in their minds by a seemingly magical fascination, which he could render when he chose almost irresistible. Yet he never spoke with satisfaction to himself." His ruling passion was military glory; next, diplomacy. "It is idle now to speculate what he might have been had Washington yielded to Monroe, Madison and others and appointed him minister to the French Republic. Our country, before which he then stood in the original brightness of his character, would have been honored in the choice, and his own destiny been widely different."—Parton.

BURR—ANA.

During his exile in Europe, Burr kept a private journal intended for the perusal of his daughter Theodosia. After the death of that lady, the journal was carefully preserved by her father, and finally given to his biographer, Matthew L. Davis, with unlimited license of publication. This journal, with a collection of Burr's letters, was published in two vols., octavo, entitled, Journal and Correspondence of Aaron Burr. On going to Europe in 1807, he left his most valuable papers with Mrs. Alston, and these were lost in the ill fated "Patriot."

The first biography of Burr was written by Samuel Lorenzo Knapp, LL. D. He was followed by Matthew L. Davis, who had perhaps more abundant materials, or a more intimate association with his subject, and the men and times connected with it.

The fascinating work of James Parton is discredited in some quarters, though apparently for no better reason than that it reads like a romance. All his biographers agree as to the main facts and conclusions, and thus far they have not been successfully gainsaid. The career of Burr was a romance in real life which needs no invention to equal in interest the most ingenious works of fiction.

Dr. Knapp, in his preface, gives an amusing illustration of the manner in which reputations are sometimes made or marred. "Ancient history informs us that Osapho, a Lybian king, was anxious to have divine honors paid to him by his subjects, being surfeited by such as were merely human. This wish of his heart occupied his attention day and night. At last he hit upon a stratagem to secure the homage due the gods for himself. He established an extensive aviary of those numerous talking birds found in warm climates. His slaves in secret taught the birds whenever they were fed or wanted food to cry aloud, 'Osapho is a god.' When all the birds were thoroughly instructed in this language, the whole flock were allowed to fly from their cages to the thickest groves, and when the shepherds and herds came to repose in the shade in the heat of the day, the whole sylvan train were astonished to hear the birds pronounce distinctly the words: 'Osapho is a god.' The inspired birds were tame and had no fears of men; this increased their credit with the audience. The words were repeated from tree to tree until the whole grove was vocal with the sound. The wonder-struck listeners hurried from the groves to the palace of the king and fell down and worshiped him. The language of the birds was taken as oracular, when it only arose from a trick to gull the Lybians.

"How easily might the scene have been reversed if some enemy of the king had taught a flock of these talking birds by the same art to have said: 'Osapho is a demon.' In all probability the ingenious monarch would have been massacred by his subjects or have been driven into the desert as hated by man and forsaken by the gods.

"In every age and nation there have been attempts, perhaps less harmless than this, to elevate the character of one and to depress that of another, Demosthenes against Æschines, Cicero against Anthony, Chatham against the Walpoles, etc.

"In all times we have seen these instructed parrots who have been taught to declare this one a god and another a demon. Not only the parrot and the mocking bird have been so instructed, but birds also of a less honorable character, the vulture and the raven after their kind have been known to flap their wings and to croak, to give some political soothsayers the opportunity of returning bad omens to the people against the election of certain men to office, and even more unkind still, the little songsters whose flight was not high enough to be within the circle of divination, were made to flutter and scream at a particular name. * * * * *

"The errors of history are often cured by subsequent historians, but when an individual is slandered, the slanders last long and become a part of his name. The malignant exaggerate them; the careless repeat them, and those who have prejudged will not be convinced of their error."

As an instance of wild exaggeration, if indeed blasphemy be not the more proper term, it is related that Lafayette was welcomed at Bolton, Mass., under an arch inscribed: "The Great Jehovah, Washington, and Lafayette."

PROTEGES.

JOHN VANDERLYN.—Burr always had a protege in training upon whose culture he bestowed unwearied pains and more money than he could always afford.

The most distinguished of these was John Vanderlyn whom Burr discovered in a blacksmith's shop near Kingston, N. Y., where he had stopped to have a shoe replaced on one of his horses. Leaving the shop he strolled away for a few minutes and when he returned discovered on the side of a stable near by a remarkably spirited and well executed charcoal drawing of his own carriage and horses. On inquiry he learned that the blacksmith's apprentice had done it. He conversed with the lad and found him intelligent though ignorant, born in the neighborhood and without instruction in drawing. Burr wrote his address on a piece of paper and handing it to the boy said: "My boy, you are too smart a fellow to stay here all your life. If you should want to change your employment and see the world, put a clean shirt into your pocket, go to New York and go straight to that address." In a few months the boy Vanderlyn presented himself at Burr's residence at Richmond Hill with a clean shirt nicely folded in a parcel and the identical paper which Burr had given him. He was warmly welcomed, taken into the family, educated and instructed in drawing. Afterwards Burr assisted him to Europe, where he spent five years in the study of painting and became an artist worthy of the name.

While Burr himself was wandering in Europe Vanderlyn was exhibiting pictures in the Louvre at Paris, and received from Napoleon a gold medal, besides compliments and felicitations from the Emperor's own lips. He afterwards had commissions from Congress and painted the "Landing of Columbus" for a panel in the rotunda of the capitol at Washington. He also painted the portraits of Burr and Theodosia, from which the engravings were taken by which their lineaments are now known to the public. Burr was also painted by Stewart.

AARON C. BURR, who d. in N. Y. C., July 27, 1882, was brought over to this country when eight years old; adopted by Col. Burr and took his name. About 1842 he became a dealer in diamonds and precious stones and acquired a competence; he retired about 1862. His life subsequently was spent for the most part in traveling and he accumulated many valuable antiques and relics. He was said to be a son of Count Verde de Lisle, a French nobleman. He left a wid. and one son.

CHARLES J. BURDETT, was educated by Col. Burr at Capt. Partridge's military school in Middletown, Conn. He studied law and we believe practiced in N. Y. city, where he was well known among the local politicians and celebrities. He wrote Margaret Moncreiffe, a novel, and several other similar works. He m. and had a son and dau.

THE MISSES EDEN.—Medeef Eden, a wealthy New York brewer, died leaving a large amount of real estate to his two sons, to be equally divided; but if one died unmarried, the survivor to have the whole. These young men were somewhat fast, and having need of much ready money, borrowed it of sharpers at heavy interest secured on first mortgages. The loans were called in, and in default the lenders took the property at forced sale. There was crookedness in some of these transactions. The Eden young men were reduced to poverty. After suffering a while, they took the case to an old friend of their father's, namely, Alexander Hamilton. His decision was that they had been unfairly done out of their property, but that they could not recover it. Afterward, they submitted the case to Aaron Burr, who agreed with Hamilton as to the wrong, but differed with him as to recovery. He told them they could get it back; but for some reason the brothers failed to prosecute, lost hope and took to drink.

After Burr's return from Europe he happened one day to read a notice of the death of one of the Eden brothers, and the whole matter came back to his mind. He hunted up the survivor, whom he found with a wife and two little girls living miserably in a hovel in Westchester County. He at once removed the family to his own house in New York, and supported them until the long, protracted lawsuit which he began and carried through, was won and restitution made. He directed the education of the daughters, corresponding with them regularly; and his letters to them would form an interesting and valuable treatise on female education. Besides recovering the estate, his guardianship was of inestimable value to the Misses Eden.

NATILIE DE PAGE.—The young daughter of a French lady who was once a member of the family of the Princess Lamballe, was adopted by Burr in his days of prosperity and educated as his own child. Natilie married a son of Col. Sumter of South Carolina.

WOMEN.—The remark of Davis concerning Burr's relations to women, Parton emphatically denies, and Burr himself declares that he was not guilty of the crimes in this respect with which he was charged. Doubtless he was much more tempted than many others, and his conduct, perhaps, not always exemplary; but his life-long habit of adopting and educating increased his reputation for gallantry. At one time in the latter part of his life he contributed to the support of ten women, not one of whom, it is absolutely certain, stood in any improper relation to him.

SLAVES.—He was the owner at different times of several slaves. All that remained in his family for any length of time were taught to read and write, and it was his practice, in absence, to correspond with one or more of them.

Gen. Jackson never believed that Burr was a traitor. His object, he said, was to extirpate the Spanish power in America, beginning with the colonizing of Texas, thence to march on Mexico and make himself emperor.

Why Burr should tell M. L. Davis that his grandfather was a noble German, or a German of noble parentage, is a mystery. When on his travels in Germany, certain German families claimed relationship in the Burr line of his ancestry. Was Burr who was so well informed as to the pedigree of others, ignorant of his own? The fact being that not one of all his ancestors on either side to the 7th generation, so far as traced, was born out of New England. (App.)

On his return from the fatal ground at Weehawken, a relative from New Haven, one of the Edwards family, called and remained some time in conversation with him. This gentleman on his way down town soon afterwards began to perceive signs of some unwonted excitement, and was soon met by the rumor that the Vice-President had that very morning shot Hamilton in a duel; this he was able to contradict emphatically, for had he not left Mr. Burr a few minutes before, in whom he had failed to see the slightest appearance of agitation, and who had spoken not a word about a duel.

Dr. Matthews testified in his Recollections of Burr that nothing could be more fascinating than his manners, or more delightful than his conversation. While Dr. M. was speaking of Theodosia, Burr moaned and wept to such a degree that Dr. M. paused. "There is a desolation here," said Burr, laying his hand on his heart, "that none but the searcher of hearts can understand."

"He did not love his daughter," says the writer in the Atlantic Monthly of 1858, before referred to, "he was proud of her because she was beautiful and talented: had she been a plain, or an ordinary person, he would not have cared for her."

"There is always something great in the man against whom the world exclaims: at whom everyone throws a stone; on whose character all attempt to fasten a thousand crimes, without being able to prove one."—Zimmerman.

8254. Mary Edwards, b. Sunday, April 17, 1734, d. at Northampton, Mass., Feb. 22, 1807. "She was distinguished not less for her maternal solicitude, ardent temperament and patriotism than for the intellectual qualities which made so illustrious the name of Jonathan Edwards. She early perceived the indications of superior genius in her son Timothy, and under her direction he became familiar with the rudiments of the Latin language before he was six years old, and at the same early period laid the foundation of his remarkable knowledge of history, geography and the kindred departments of learning." She m. Nov. 8, 1750, Maj. Timothy Dwight* of Northampton, b. 1726; Y. C. 1744. He was a large, strong man, six feet and four inches high, while his wife was so small that he used to carry her around the room on the palm of his hand at arm's length. Her sons were large and strong like their father. He died of fever at Natchez, Miss., June 10, 1778. He had bought a large tract of land on the Miss. river, extending several miles along the banks and including the present city of Natchez, intending to remove there with his large family. His son, Sereno E. Dwight, accompanied him and was lost at sea, and the evidence of title to the land was never found. The news of the death of the father was about a year in reaching the family at N. It was a summer day and one of the elder sons was making hay in the field, when one of the smallest of the children, who heard the announcement, came tottering through the grass with the sad story. The youth threw his pitchfork into the air and exclaimed: "Then we are all ruined," and such was the force of his emotions that his mind never recovered from the effects to the day of his death.—Dwight Genealogy.

time the college had become generally unpopular in consequence of alleged sectarian narrowness. Two of the tutors had resigned. Dwight and John Trumbull taking their places. The regeneration of the college now began; the study of belles lettres was introduced; its character rapidly rose, and Dwight became so popular with the students that when at the age of 25 he resigned his office, they drew up and almost unanimously signed a petition to the corporation that he might be elected to the presidency. Dwight, however, interposed and prevented further proceedings. At the age of 19 he began writing the Conquest of Canaan, which he finished in about four years. Some passages from it are quoted by Mr. Griswold in his Poets and Poetry of America, which that writer and other critics consider equal to any American poetry produced at that period.

In 1777 the Y. C. classes were separated on account of the war. In May of that year, Dwight, with a number of students, repaired to Wethersfield, Conn., and remained till autumn, when having been licensed to preach as a Cong. minister, he joined the army as chaplain. In this office he won much regard by his professional industry and eloquence, and at the same time exerted considerable influence by writing patriotic songs which became popular throughout New England. The death of his father in 1778, induced him to resign the chaplaincy and return to Northampton to assist his mother to support and educate her family. He remained there five years laboring on a farm, preaching and superintending a school, and was in that period twice elected a member of the Mass. Leg.

Declining offers of political advancement he was ordained (1783) minister at Greenfield, Conn., where he remained twelve years, discharging his pastoral duties satisfactorily, and in addition taking charge of an academy established by himself, which soon became the most popular school of the kind that had ever existed in America.

Dr. Stiles d. in May, 1794. Dwight at the next commencement (Sept., 1794) was elected to the presidency. The college at this time was in a disordered condition and suffering from pecuniary embarrassments. The reputation of the new president as a teacher, soon brought around him a very large number of students; new professorships were established, the library and philosophical apparatus extended, the course of study and system of government changed, and the college rapidly rose in public favor. Besides acting as president, Dwight was the stated preacher, Professor of Theology, and teacher of the senior class for nearly 21 years, during which time the reputation of the college was inferior to that of no other in America. As an instructor, probably he was never surpassed in this country, and as a theologian he had few if any equals. An eloquent preacher, with a handsome person, an expressive countenance, polished and affable manners, brilliant conversational abilities and vast stores of learning, it is almost impossible that he should fail of success in any effort, and least of all in the administration of the important office which he so long and so honorably filled.—Condensed from R. W. Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America.

Dr. Lyman Beecher, in Autobiography, says: "On the accession of Pres. Dwight, the college was in a most ungolly state. The Christian element was almost extinct. Most of the students were skeptical and rowdies were plenty. Intemperance, profligacy, gambling, and licentiousness were common. Most of the members of the classes before me, were infidels and called themselves Voltaire, Rousseau, DeAlembert, etc. They thought the faculty were afraid of free discussion, but when they handed Dr. Dwight a list of subjects for class disputation, to their surprise he selected this: 'Is the Bible the word of God?' and told them to do their best. He heard all they had to say and answered them, and there was an end. To a mind approximately like mine his preaching was a continual feast. He was copious and polished in style, though disciplined and logical. There was a faith and power of doctrine there that has not been since surpassed if equalled. I took notes of all his sermons, condensing and forming sketches. He was a noble form with a noble head, and had one of the sweetest smiles that you ever saw. Oh! how I loved him. I loved him as my own soul and he loved me as a son. * *

"His influence was extensive and beneficent beyond that of any other man in New England. His enemies called him 'Old Pope Dwight,' which was one title to my respect. The family thought it a privilege to gather round and listen to his talk.*

*In an article published in the New Haven Journal in the spring of 1878, called "Reminiscences of an Old Bookstore," Henry Howe [?] sketches some of the notables of New Haven half a century ago, who used to frequent the College Bookstore of Hezekiah Howe, a very attractive place for the college men and other litterateurs. Pres. Dwight was before Henry's time, but his father has left a reminiscence of him. Dwight would sometimes drop in to look at the new books and magazines and converse with friends whom he happened to meet there. On these occasions the news would soon spread and the neighbors would flock to the store and surr. and the Doctor, those in the rear standing on tip-toe to see over the heads of those in front, all eager to hear every word that fell from his lips.

Nobody even thought of talking much, only of hearing. Whenever I wanted advice I went to him as a father and told him everything." Catharine E. Beecher relates: "The news of Dr. Dwight's death was brought to father in the pulpit (Litchfield, Conn.), near the close of the Sabbath service. A man came in suddenly and went up into the pulpit and whispered to him. Father turned from the messenger to the congregation and said, 'Dr. Dwight is gone!' then, raising his hands, he said, with a burst of tears, 'My father! My father! The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof.' The congregation with an electric impulse arose to their feet, and many eyes were bathed in tears. It was one of the most impressive scenes I ever saw." He d. of internal cancer, Jan. 11, 1817, at New Haven. In 1842 he was appointed principal of the branch of the State Univ. at White Pigeon, and the college prospered under his administration. But under these labors in connection with two sermons each Sabbath, and other sermons on special occasions, his health gave way in the fourth year, and he resigned his place in the institution. He d. Sept. 15, 1846, a. abt. 57. "With his last breath he cried, 'All is peace; all is glory.'" Before his conversion he seemed to have lost utterly all power of resistance to the craving for drink, and yet amidst it all there remained amiable and noble traits of character. Unlike most inebriates he was always in good humor, and no man at any time doubted his stern integrity. In his wildest days never profane, vulgar or wicked in language, and his feelings always benevolent and kindly. Never an unkind word spoken to his wife in his wildest moments of dissipation. After conversion he became a temperance advocate, and says the Rev. Wm. Roper, "his temperance lectures were sometimes like a tempest, sweeping all before them, and scores were reclaimed. As a preacher he was energetic, impressive, eloquent and successful in winning souls. To the needy he was more likely to give the whole of his last loaf, than half. His pupils he regarded with a paternal affection, and not uncommonly at parting he would take them in his arms and weep profusely as he bade them farewell, and in after years he would gather as many of them (during conference sessions) as he could for an interchange of greetings and recollections. Multitudes honored and revered him while living, and remember him with gratitude and veneration.* i. by 2d m.:

82566. William T. Edwards, b. Nov. 11, 1770; apprenticed to his uncle, Col. Mathias Ogden, a tanner and currier. Col. Edwards introduced the system of tanning leather now employed in nearly all the tanneries in the U. S., by which leather is tanned in about one-fourth the time required in the old European process. He rem. from Elizabethtown, N. J., to Northampton, Mass., where he built his first tannery, and sent his first leather to Boston in 1794. The supply of hemlock bark having failed in the valley of the Conn., he turned his attention to the vast hemlock forests of the Catskill mountains, and in 1817 rem. to Hunter, Greene Co., N. Y., and erected on Scholarie Creek his model tannery, from which about 10,000 sides of sole leather were sent to N. Y. C. annually. He invented many machines and adapted devices used for other purposes to the purpose of tanning, and was able to make water power take the place of manual labor to a great extent. The great success which has attended the manufacture of leather in the U. S. must be ascribed not only to the plentiful supply of tanning material, but also to the improved methods first employed by Edwards.—Samuel D. Tillman in Johnson's Cyclopaedia. 8259. Jonathan Edwards, b. May 26, 1745; rem. 1751 with his father's fam. to Stockbridge. The settlement then contained but 12 white families and 150 Indian families. He associated principally with Indian boys, and outside of his father's family seldom heard any language but the Indian, which was more familiar to him than his mother tongue. He knew the Indian name of some things whose English names he did not know; he thought in Indian. At about the age of ten he went with the Rev. Gideon Hawley to Oquago, on the Susquehanna River, to learn the Oneida language, but war breaking out he stayed but six months. The Indians became much attached to him, and, apprehending an attack from the French, took him on back and carried him many miles through the wilderness to a place of safety. In 1763 he was converted under Dr. Finley and professed religion; stud. under Dr. Bellamy and licensed to preach 1766; tutor at Princeton, 1767; ord. pastor of the North Cong. chh., New Hav., Conn., Jan. 5, 1769; continued here until May, 1795, when he was dismissed by an Eccles. Council in consequence of difference of sentiment with parishioners. When Washington was in New Haven he attended public worship at the church of Mr. Edwards; the latter having made preparations to address the Sunday School children of his congregation, made no variation in the exercises nor any allusion to the illustrious visitor, a course far more agreeable to Washington no doubt than the customary ostentatious attention. In Jan., 1796, instal. pastor Cong. chh. at Colebrook, Conn. In 1799, appt. Pres. Union Col., and during his term of office organized a number of Cong. churches. A severe attack of intermittent fever in July, 1801, so affected his nervous system as to deprive him of speech, and at last of reason, his mind during the latter days being almost a blank, he d. Aug. 1, 1801. He was apparently austere and reserved, but really mild and affectionate, though constitutionally irritable. Short in stature, dark complexion, piercing eye and severe countenance, strongly lined with thought, distant in manner and with no small talk. In the pulpit, too profound to be interesting or even to be understood by ordinary minds. A portion of his preaching was highly practical, and sometimes irresistibly impressive and even terrible. He looked but little at his auditory and seemed consequently to be dealing in abstractions. Nevertheless, he was uttering great and profound thoughts, and those who were capable of understanding admired his genius. Certain coincidences with his father considered remarkable. Of the same name, liberally educated; distinguished scholars; tutors in the Sem. whr. educated; one at Princeton the other at Yale; preachers; settled respectively in congregations in which their maternal grandfathers had been settled before them.*

Dismissed for differences with congregations after a pastorate of about a quarter of a century; afterw. settled in retired situation; then elected College President and soon after inauguration died at very nearly the same age. To this may be added, in mind, person and life, they were remarkably alike. To these coincidences may be added the fact that, like his father, he preached on the first Sabbath of the year of his death from the text: "This year Thou shalt surely die." Dr. Emmons says that the father had more reason than his son, but the son was a greater reasoner than the father.—Sprague's Annals. D. D. from Princeton Col. His complete works were edited by his grandson, Tryon Edwards, D. D., in 2 vols., oct., and pub. at Andover, 1842. He m. Oct. 4, 1770, Mary, dau. of Hon. 825.11.6. Henrietta Frances Edwards, b. June 28, 1786; d. April 16, 1870, a. 84; m. Eli Whitney, b. Westboro, Mass., Dec. 8, 1765; Y. C. 1792, and soon after went to Ga. where he stud. law, residing meanwhile with the wid. of Gen. Greene. Here his attention was called to the slow, imperfect and expensive process of cleaning the cotton, or separating the seed from the fibre; which was done entirely by hand, by picking out one seed at a time with the fingers, and it required dexterity, skill and industry for one person to clean one pound a day. By this process the material was so expensive as to be of little value as an article of commerce. This difficulty was sorely felt by the planter and the wish expressed that a machine could be invented to do the work. Mr. Whitney immediately began to investigate the structure of the product and to devise means of making it of value to mankind. In a short time he contrived and constructed a machine, entirely new in form and principle, which answered every purpose aimed at. This was the cotton gin. With this machine one person may with ease clean one thousand pounds of cotton in one day, an increase of one thousand fold over hand labor. As a labor saving machine therefore it has perhaps never been rivaled. The inventions of Hargreaves, Arkwright, Watts and others had prepared the way for that of Whitney, without which, at least as to the two first, they would have been of comparatively little value to mankind. The labors even of Fulton have been of less value to the Southern States than Whitney's. The results which followed it were wonderful in magnitude and extent. It trebled the value of immense areas of land. It has saved to the Southern States one thousand millions of dollars. It made cotton king. It whitened every sea with the wings of commerce. It built great cities. It gave employment to millions of people. It has added to the comfort of almost every human being on the globe; yet Mr. Whitney received no compensation. He obtained a patent, but the law was imperfect, the courts and juries personally interested and venal, and he suffered much in defending his rights against the encroachments of the envious and designing in a long series of law suits. In 1797, impressed with the uncertainty of his hopes in relation to the gin, and the necessity of some business for the support of himself and family, he obtained in 1798, through Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Secretary of the Treasury, a contract to supply the U. S. with ten thousand stand of arms for $134,000. He immediately purchased a site and erected his works about two miles from New Hav. Green (now Whitneyville) and completed his contract in ten years. Several others made similar contracts with the government about the same time, but none succeeded in producing work of the required quality and at the stipulated price, and in some instances large sums were spent in the attempt. Mr. Whitney succeeded principally by means of original machinery and new processes and methods of his own invention. The inevitable obloquy, ridicule and opposition of competitors and enemies, the doubts and apprehensions of friends and the obstinate adherence of workmen to old ways were at last overcome, and Mr. Whitney lived to see not only his system but most of his machinery adopted in every other considerable establishment, public or private, in the U. S. After the completion of his first contract with the government he obtained a second for fifteen thousand stand of arms. He d. in N. Hav. Jan. 8, 1825, a. 59 yrs., greatly respected and beloved. Whitney avenue bears his name, also Whitney Lake, the reservoir that supplies the city of New Haven with water; and Whitney Peak, an elevation within the new East Rock Park.

The influence of her example and precepts were long felt by her descendants, who to the third and fourth generation have reason to bless her memory." She m. Jan. 15, 1745-6, Seth Wetmore, Esq., of Middletown, Conn., (his 3d wf.), [see Stow fam.], b. Nov. 18, 1700; d. of small-pox April 10, 1778. He was dep. to the General Court 48 terms, 1738-1761; Magistrate of the town of Middletown; Judge of the Hartf. Co. court, and with Jabez Hamlin Justice of the Quorum for Hartf. Co. 1761-68. (For amusing anecdotes of Judge Wetmore see Wetmore Genealogy.) A genial humor is a characteristic of the Stows of Middletown and of their descendants. Through the Stows Judge W. was a second cousin of Sarah Pierpont wife of Jonathan Edwards. His wife was Aunt to Jonathan, jr., and Pierpont Edwards, and grand aunt to Timothy Dwight and Aaron Burr. Pierpont Edwards and Aaron Burr studied law with Judge Wetmore. Dwight and the younger Jonathan Edwards were occasional visitors. Burr and his uncle Pierpont Edwards were nearly of the same age and in some respects of the same inclination. One Saturday night Burr and Edwards in the full dress of the time—short breeches, silk stockings, low quartered shoes, etc.—in great haste to get their supper in order to call on some young ladies of the neighborhood, dropped some hasty pudding on their breeches. The kind hearted colored cookess, Membo, with towel and warm water cleaned and made them presentable and sent them on their way rejoicing. In the division of Judge Wetmore's estate Membo fell to Mrs. Whittlesey.

9. Simon Tuttle, bap. in New Haven, March 28, 1647. He appears in the list of proprietors of Wallingford in 1670, and had lot No. 13 with 8 acres of out land assigned to him. Dr. Savage (Gen. Dict.) says he did not stay long. He did not, in fact, take up his allotment and probably continued in New Haven until after the death of his mother, Dec., 1684.

He is on the list of proprietors of New Haven in 1680, and received his share in the 3d division, "two heads," showing that at that date he had a wife but no children. He was probably m. in 1679 or 1680. In 1673 he is called of New Haven in an agreement for right of way, signed by Thomas, David, Benjamin, Jonathan, Simon and Nathaniel Tuttle. The original paper is now in possession of the family of the late Elihu Blake, Esq., of N. Hav., from which the fac simile of signatures was traced by his dau. Miss Emma L. Blake. In 1677-8 conv. to Benjamin Brackett, Cordwainer, "a part of land my father, Mr. William Tuttle, bought of John Punderson." In 1681 he conv. rt. in land on the west side of West river, in the 4th division. In 1683 he conveys house, barn and home lot,  $\frac{3}{4}$  of an acre, bounded on the east by Nathan Andrews, west by the street, north by home lot formerly — Johnson's, and south by Edward Dixfont (?), to Richard Higginbotham of N. Hav. In these deeds he is called of N. Hav. In 1685, "Simon Tuttle of Wallingford, cooper," conv. his portion of the 3d division in N. Hav., thirty acres at Oyster Point, bounded on the west in part by the Milford line; receiving in exchange a lot adjoining the common on the east side. VIII. Henry, b. Jan. 29, 1818, in Windham, N. Y.; rem., 1837, to Sterling (then called Rock River Rapids), Ill. He was among the first settlers, the Indians having been removed but a year and a half, and the land not in market and unsurveyed until the spring of 1842. In fall of 1841 "my father came out to see the country and make preparations to remove his family, but was taken sick and d. there—a great disappointment to me, as I had looked forward hopefully to the time when I should again be united with those most dear to me. The land I secured near Sterling became valuable, and I sold it and bought 300 acres about ten miles west of S. near the R. R., now (1870) worth \$18,000. I delight in the occupation of farming; have never held or sought office." He d. Jan. 12, 1879. Mr. Tuttle was a zealous member of the Round Grove Meth. chh., and was highly esteemed by his fellow members as a good, practical, everyday christian. 91229. Sidney Tuttle, b. Dec. 12, 1786; Sheriff of Greene Co., N. Y., 1825-28; Postmaster at Windham 25 yrs. until he rem. to Schoharie Co.; Rep. counties of Schoharie and Delaware in the State Senate 1850-1; Delegate to the Democratic convention in summer of 1868 to nominate Presidential candidates; several years Supervisor of Cohecton, Sullivan Co., which office he held until over 81 yrs. of a. He occupied an enviable position for many years in Greene, Schoharie and Sullivan counties. He d. Sept. 25, 1868. The following is an obit. from a Windham Co. newspaper:

"Died suddenly, on the evening of the 25th inst., at the residence of his son-in-law, E. A. Clark, Esq., at Jeffersonville, Sullivan County, Hon. Sidney Tuttle, in the 82d yr. of his age, honored and respected by a large circle of relatives and friends—who, with the whole community will long mourn his loss.

"Mr. Tuttle was no ordinary man. Born in the State of Connecticut, he came to Windham, Greene Co., N. Y., soon after the close of the Revolution. Greene county was then new and sparsely settled. Without the advantages of early education, but with a robust constitution, sound mind, and great energy of character, he grew up with the growth of the country; early entering into every enterprise calculated to open its resources, and increase its growth. He was among the first to see the importance of a great thoroughfare from Catskill, on the Hudson, west via Delaware and Susquehanna rivers, to the lakes, and mainly through his enterprise the great Catskill Turnpike was begun and completed.

"With Col. Edwards, Col. Pratt and others, he engaged in and fostered the then new tanning interest; which has added so much to the wealth and prosperity of the country, and its enterprising citizens.

"Such enterprise, energy and zeal, was duly appreciated by his fellow citizens, by electing him Sheriff of the county, which office he held many years with other offices.

"In 1849 he was elected State Senator from the Delaware and Schoharie District. In April, 1851, with the Hon. Charles Mann and others, who believed the nine million bill for the enlargement of the canals unconstitutional, he resigned the office of Senator. In May of the same year, he was re-elected by a largely increased majority, his resignation being thus approved by his constituents. In 1852 he moved to Jeffersonville, Sullivan county, there establishing a large tannery and other business enterprises, which have added so much to the prosperity of that thriving village and section of country. In 1855, he settled at Cohecton Depot, using his ample means in aiding his neighbors and the prosperity of the vicinity. His townsmen appreciated his services, and for several years he represented the town in the Board of Supervisors of the county with marked success.

"In politics Mr. Tuttle was a Democrat of the school of Jefferson and Jackson. With the latter he believed that the 'Union must be preserved.' Entering heartily into the contest for its preservation, he contributed largely of his time and money for that purpose. Such was his success that the town of Cohecton sent no man to the war by draft. None rejoiced more at the final successful close of the war than Sidney Tuttle.

III. Daniel Sylvester, b. Jan. 26, 1837; grad. Columbia Col. 1857; Supt. of St. Paul's Sunday School, N. Y. (The old altar cross of St. Paul's is now in St. Paul's chh. of Virginia City, Montana.) Elected Missionary Bishop of the Prot. Epis. chh. in 1865, being but 28 yrs. of a.; consecrated two yrs. later, May 1, 1867, Miss. Bishop for the Territories of Montana, Idaho and Utah. He was then the youngest of the bishops. When he went to Utah in 1867 there was not a protestant chh. or minister in all that region; there were but two communicants and twenty-five others calling themselves christians, and these were persecuted by the Mormons. The field had been abandoned by every christian minister who had attempted work there, and up to 1871, and perhaps later, the Bishop and his co-laborers were the only protestant ministers at work. In 1871 there were seven clergymen, besides himself, and five church edifices. One of them, St. Mark's in Salt Lake City, is built of stone at cost of $46,000, was opened on the free seat principle. There are day schools and Sunday schools, many of the pupils in which are children of Mormon parents. Connected with the mission is a grammar school taught by New York ladies. There is a school at Ogden, and one in Boise City, where there is also a church which has (1871) 83 communicants, and is self-supporting. In the various schools there are 220 pupils, and in the Sunday schools nearly as many. Most of the children are free scholars and supported by scholarships from the East. The Bishop is kindly treated by the Mormons and has their respect; yet his task as to Utah must be one of peculiar difficulty and trial, and to him and his work are particularly and eminently applicable the remarks of Bishop Littlejohn in Lincoln Cathedral, Eng., where he gave an account of the American Church as a missionary body: "Of the missionary bishops I cannot speak too highly. They are worthy of the best days of the church, and for energy, zeal, endurance of hardship and denial, administrative ability and abundance of labors, I doubt whether any body of men consecrated to the like office and work has ever surpassed them. Without exception these men of heroic mould are laying amidst discouragements and difficulties foundations worthy of apostolic master builders in the primitive days of the church. By what they do, dare and suffer, they deserve to be regarded as the glory and strength of our missionary work."

The Rev. N. W. Gilbert writes in the Spirit of Missions, June, 1877: "For ten years Bishop Tuttle has traversed the valleys and mountain canyons, visiting the log hut of the miner and the humble ranch of the farmer, and his name has become a household word, and his coming awaited with intense eagerness. * * * The people have been drawn to the church through the influence of Bishop Tuttle alone." 92. Timothy Tuttle, b. 1682; prob. in N. Haven; rem. with his father's family when about 3 years of age to Wallingford, Conn. In early life he explored the country to the westward of W. and selected land for a farm, which he cleared with his own hands, and on it prepared a home for his family, working through the week as it was too far to go home every night and returning only on Saturdays, guided by a line of blazed trees he had marked through the woods. The spot is about a mile east of the central part of the village of Cheshire. In 1715, it is referred to in the division of Wallingford into school districts, the west division to extend "as far as west of the river, as high as Timothy Tuttle's and Timothy Beach's." Here he afterwards erected the first frame house in the town of Cheshire (according to the family tradition, but Joseph P. Beach has doubts about this house being the first, and accords that honor to the Hitchcock house in another part of the town; "the Tuttle house may have been the second.") It was a good specimen of the Conn. farm house in the olden time; under its roof were born children, grand children, great gr. chil. and great great gr. chil. of the builder; it was standing until a few years since, when it was burned by an incendiary, being at the time unoccupied.

In 1723 the West Wallingford district was made a society, and at the first meeting (Sept. 16, 1723) Timothy Tuttle was voted Moderator* for the year ensuing. His name is the first name on the records of the town, Nov. 4, 1723; Caleb Williams, Timothy Tuttle, Joshua Hotchkiss, Nathaniel Bunnell and Thomas Corry were voted a committee to manage the work of the meeting house, Dec., 1723; Timothy Tuttle, Joseph Thompson and Thomas Mathews the committee to seat the meeting house.

Sept. 1, 1724, the same committee to "dignify the meeting house;" same year he was one of a committee of three to manage school affairs. Nov., 1724, he was one of the com. of three to manage affairs of Ordination. (Rev. Samuel Hall was ordained the first pastor of the chh. in Cheshire, Dec., 1724.) The same year T. T. appointed col. of the four penny rate.

In Dec., 1725, on a com. of three to manage society affairs for ensuing yr. Dec. 20, 1726, "Sergeant Tuttle" on com. of three to run boundary lines between the east and west societies (Wallingford and Cheshire).

Nov. 17, 1729, Matthew Bellamy, (f. of Rev. Dr. Joseph, the celebrated divine), Sergeant Tuttle and Isaac Moss, a com. to build school house; also to manage soc. affairs for ensuing year. Also next year, and to manage school affairs. Nov. 8, 1732, Sergeant Tuttle voted moderator for year ensuing. Nov. 1, 1736, John Hull, Sergeant Tuttle and John Gaylord to manage society affairs.

On Sept. 17, 1737, a new meeting house 64x45 and 24 feet in height was voted, and Sergt. Tuttle to be Moderator for year ensuing, and on com. to manage soc. affairs, and in 1738. June 12, 1739, on com. of three to sell the old meeting house. Chosen deacon† Aug. 19, 1739. In Dec., 1739, on com. of three to manage soc. affairs, and the two succeeding years. In 1742 he was a member of the council for the ordination of Rev. Benj. Woodbridge as first pastor of the chh. at Amity (Woodbridge.)

He bought land in Farmington of Benj. Judd.—Farm. Land Rec. He d. in Cheshire, April 15, 1756, a. 74. His grave-stone once standing in the old grave-yard there, and on which faint traces of inscription are still visible, has been utilized in the construction of an adjacent stone fence. His life began two years before the death of the ancestress of the race recorded in this work, and he doubtless sat on her knee and heard her voice. It ended only nine years before the birth, in the house which he built, of her grt. grt. grt. gr. s., Uri Tuttle (the father of the compiler), thus covering a period that embraces in part the cotemporary history of five generations.

His will dated Dec., 1753, "being in the 71st year of my age," names eldest son Ephraim, exec.: "wife Sarah to have all the estate she brought me at time of my marriage;" sons Moses, Gershom, Timothy, Simon; daughters Mary, wife of Miles Hull; Abigail, wife of John Gaylord; Melitable, wife of Andrew Clark, and children of Rachel, who was wife of Nathan Tyler.

* In early times the Moderator presided at the Town Courts, which consisted of three, five or seven of the chief inhabitants or selectmen, and in case of tie he had the casting vote. This Court met at stated times to hear and decide minor controversies between the townsmen, respecting trespasses or debts. It also had the power of summoning parties before it for trial.—Davis' Hist. of Wall.

† The first deacons of the Cheshire chh. were Stephen Hotchkiss and Joseph Ives. On the resignation of Dea. Hotchkiss, Timothy Tuttle was chosen, and on the resignation of Dea. advantages quite limited, but by extensive reading and constant exercise of vigorous natural powers, became an able reasoner and thorough theologian. She was distinguished for consistent piety, sound sense, and excellent judgment. Mr. Clark was brought up a Congregationalist, but joined the Episcopal communion. The story of his conversion was related to his grandson, Rev. John W. Clark, by Rev. Dr. Burhaus, the celebrated home missionary, whom he met at the house of Miss Boardman, in New Milford, Conn.; the Dr. was then not far from his 90th year. In course of his missionary labors, Dr. B. had built a shed of scantlings and boards not far from Mr. Clark's, administered the Holy Communion and preached in it. After the service, Mr. Clark invited the Dr. to spend the night at his house. He declined at first, but learning that Mr. Clark's wf. was an Episcopalian, consented. After supper the fine points of Calvin were discussed by the Dr. and his host until past eleven o'clock; the discussion was eagerly listened to by the two boys, William and Orrin, and the dau. Clarissa, and "the children never winked, they were so interested." An impression was made on Mr. Clark, and he finally became an Episcopalian; "but," says Rev. Mr. Clark, "however much credit belonged to Dr. Burhaus in the matter, I think the influence of grandma mainly wrought the change. She was a lovely christian woman, whom all her sons and daughters rose up and called blessed." Eleven chil., of whom:

923251. William Atwater Clark, b. July 20, 1786; taught school; stud. at Epis. Acad. in Cheshire under Dr. Bronson; rec. (1810) dea.'s orders from Bishop Moore of N. Y.; labored with great zeal and under appalling obstacles as missionary in Western N. Y.; Ordained Priest by Bishop Hobart (1812) at Auburn, and two days after, m. by the same Prelate at Skenateles, Jacintha, dau. of Peter Anspach, Esq., who still (1858) survives. He preached in Auburn nine months, but his missionary zeal led him to abandon this desirable situation to labor in more destitute regions. At Manlius, N. Y., till 1818, then at Buffalo, where Bishop Hobart having laid the corner stone of St. Paul's, the first Epis. chh. in that place, Mr. Clark made a journey to New York to collect funds to erect the building. That building was the predecessor of the present noble edifice, "St. Paul's," erected about 1852. From 1820 to 1824, rector of Christ chh. Balston Spa, then by request rem. to New York city to aid in establishing a new parish in the eastern part of the city (All Saints), of which he became the first rector. The services held at first at the rector's residence, were transferred first to a temporary chapel; thence June 5, 1828, to the new church on the corner of Henry and Scammel streets. This part of the city had been quite destitute, especially of Episcopal ministrations, and his energetic and well directed efforts resulted in an efficient congregation, which contributed greatly to the religious prosperity of the whole neighborhood. His daughter relates that when the Seventh Presb. chh., corner of Ridge and Broome streets was burned down, my father immediately conferred with his vestry and tendered to their pastor, Rev. Elihu W. Baldwin (afterwards Pres. Wabash College), the use of our church Sunday evenings, and between our morning and afternoon services. As "All Saints" was the most central and convenient place for them, they gladly accepted the offer, and worshiped there many months.

After a ministry of thirteen years in N. Y., a chronic rheumatism, brought on by exposures during his missionary life, induced him to seek a more quiet and rural situation. Accordingly in 1837 he resigned, removed to Michigan and settled on new land in Brighton, Livingston Co. Finding there a state of indifference to religious matters, he opened his own house for services; the hearers became more numerous and a temporary building, with rough board seats, was put up and soon filled; by these means and his private example, influence, counsels and instructions, an important moral change was wrought in the community. He d. of congestion of the lungs Sept. 13, 1841. He rec. degree of M. A. from Columbia College 1824, and D. D. from Allegany College 1831. A number of his sermons were published, and in 1833 a volume of 18 sermons were pub. by request of the vestry of All Saints. 923252. Orrin Clark, b. Jan. 2, 1788; unusually delicate in his earliest years and his physician had little hope of his surviving the period of childhood. He began his studies by stealth, carrying his book while he followed the plow, and when the team stopped to rest he stopped to study, and in this way learned his Latin Grammar. At a very early period he gave evidence of a religious character and entered the Episc. Acad. at Cheshire. Admitted to Holy Orders at New Haven, 1811; missionary in Ontario and Genesee counties, N. Y.; accompanied Bishop Hobart in his first visitation in that region, 1812, and soon became Rector of Trinity chh., Geneva. He continued a supervision of the general interests of the Episc. chh. in western N. Y.; always on the alert to form churches and introduce ministers. "And he contributed more than almost any other man to the earlier growth and prosperity of the Episc. chh. in the western part of the state of N. Y."—Rev. Dr. J. N. Stone. To him more than to any one else is due the establishment of the Geneva College, of which he was an original Trustee, and held the office while he lived. D.D. from Union Col. 1827. His life was a struggle with physical infirmity. He d. Feb. 24, 1828. Bishop Doane says: "He was the pastor of my boyhood. He struck me then, and the impression remains, as very like Archbishop Tillotson. I had seen his portrait in some old folio. I was catechised by him and prepared by him for confirmation. And I am much indebted to his earnest championship for the advantages of education. No clergyman in western N. Y. was held in higher respect." That he deserved it is well shown by the fact that he was honored with the confidence of that consummate judge of men, Bishop Hobart. * * *"—Sprague's Annals. He m. 923254. John Alonzo Clark, b. May 6, 1801; Pittsfield, Mass.; youngest of 11 children; inherited from his mother a delicate constitution; prepared under his two elder brothers and entered Union Col.; grad. 1823; admitted to Deacon's orders by Bishop Hobart in All Saints' chh., N. Y., 1826; took charge of Miss. Sta., Palmyra, N. Y., and at Lyons and Sodus; labored for 3 years there; asst. rector of Christ chh., N. Y. city, Rev. Dr. Lyall, rector; in 1832 became rector of Grace chh., Providence, R. I., then a feeble parish, but under his energetic ministry grew until it holds a place second to none in the diocese; in 1835 he was called to the rectorship of St. Andrew's in Phila., to succeed the Rev. Dr. Bedell, but his constitution had been so much undermined by his severe labors that his remaining strength was not sufficient for his restless energy and ceaseless devotion, and after two years he was compelled to take a voyage to Europe; absent nine months; on his return he published Glimpses of the Old World, in two vols.; republished in London with Biog., by Rev. Dr. Tyng, 1847; in 1843 he was compelled finally to resign his rectorship; he d. Nov. 27, 1843; D.D., Kenyon Col. 1840; besides the travels he published A Christian Experience, as Displayed in Life and Writings of St. Paul; The Pastor's Testimony, 1835; The Young Disciple, or, a Memoir of Anzonetta R. Peters; Gathered Fragments, 12 mo., 1836; A Walk About Zion; Gleanings by the Way, 12 mo., 1842, and a vol. of sermons pub. after his d., Awake Thou Sleeper. Rev. Dr. Francis Peck of Brooklyn, says: "Few men in our communion or in any other have arisen, done their work and passed away at the early age at which Dr. Clark was called to his reward, who deserve better to have their names embalmed in the grateful and affectionate remembrance of the church." Rev. Dr. Stephens of Phila., says: "His pulpit and parochial labors were enough to tax the full powers of an ordinary mind, but to these he added the toils of authorship and editorship, and sustained himself in each with high honor. Many of his works will be perpetuated through distant generations; by these he became widely known throughout the church, and through them, he being dead, yet speaketh."—Sprague's Annals. He m. Oct., 1826, Sarah Buell of Fairfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., and had 9 chil., of whom 6 d. before him.

92332. Phebe Tuttle, b. Aug. 8, 1764; d. March 4, 1825; bu. in Grove st. Cem., N. Hav.; m. Amos Doolittle, b. Cheshire, Conn., May 18, 1754; learned trade of silversmith. As member of the Gov.'s Guards marched under Capt. Benedict Arnold to join patriot army near Boston. Earl, a portrait painter, also volunteered, and on returning to New Haven, Doolittle and Earl made a series of four engravings representing as many different views of the battle of Lexington. Earl made the drawings, with Doolittle as a model, and the latter made the Engravings. They were probably their first attempts in these arts, and consequently quite rude; yet they made a great sensation. These were the first copper-plates, and also the first historical engravings made in this country. "He assisted Abel Buel in engraving Homan's Map of North America, supposed to be the first map engraved and published in this country. He continued in the business of engraving for more than fifty years, and the last day he was able to work he assisted Mr. J. W. Barber of New Haven in making a reduced copy of 'The Battle of Lexington' for the Hist. Coll. of Conn."—Barber's Hist. Coll. of Conn. He was with Capt. Phineas Bradley's Co., who made the stand near the Westville bridge in defense of New Haven, July, 1779. When compelled to retreat he returned to his house near the college, (his wife being then sick,) threw his gun and equipments under the bed, and awaited with great anxiety the coming of the enemy. He probably owed his life to the address and courage of an English lady who resided with him, who explained to the soldiers in regard to the gun, that every man was required by law to keep one in his house, and that the owner of it was as strong a friend of King George as themselves. Several citizens were killed by the enemy who had given less provocation than had Mr. Doolittle. About 1788 he published, in connection with Daniel Reed, ten numbers of The American Musical Magazine, a quarto monthly. He d. Jan. 30, 1832, a. 78; bu. in Grove st. Cem., N. Hav. His portrait, painted perhaps by Earl, is in possession of the New Haven Col. Hist. Soc.

II. John Frederick Kensett, b. in Cheshire, Conn., March 22, 1816; apprenticed to his uncle Alfred Daggett, an engraver of bank note vignettes. In 1840 he went to England where he studied painting for five years, supporting himself by engraving; at that period he exhibited a view of Windsor Castle in the exhibition of the society of British artists, which was selected as the best in the collection. In 1850 he returned to New York and began a series of landscapes of mountain, river and lake scenery of New York and the eastern states, with marine views, which had eager purchasers. From this time onward his reputation and success as a landscape painter were great and assured. No artist was better known and there is hardly an American art collection of note that does not contain one or more of his pictures. His works are highly esteemed in France, Belgium and England, as well as in his native country. In 1859 he was appointed a member of the "National Art Commission" and engaged to superintend the ornamentation of the national capitol.

In the fall of 1872 he had a very severe sickness, but convalesced to nearly his usual health and was on "Contentment Island" (one of the small islands on the Conn. shore near Darien) with his friends Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Collyer. A bar or neck of sand, bare at ebb tide, connects the island with the mainland. Mrs. Collyer returning in a carriage to the island over this bar then partly covered by the tide, it was overturned and she was drowned. Kensett becoming aware of the accident rushed into the water and seizing her dead body bore it to the house. The shock, exertion and chill brought on pneumonia of which he d. Dec. 4, 1872.

"And thus closed one of the greatest and most evenly successful of artistic careers. An artist without enemies in his own guild is a rare man to find, but who ever spoke ill of Kensett? He looked and was a perfect gentleman, of kindly sentiment and genial culture, a friend to all good men and an enemy to no one. Among all the guild of artists in the Century Club, in the Union League and among a large circle of our best men and women Kensett will be mourned with unaffected sorrow."—New York Observer. The funeral was attended by the Council of the Nat. Acad. of Design, the Board of Control of the Artists' Fund Soc., of which he was Prest., the representatives of the Union League Club, the Century Club and of other organizations. The following gentlemen acted as pall-bearers: Daniel Huntington, Worthington Whitridge, John W. Casilear, Buford R. Gifford, Thos. Hicks, Richard W. Hubbard, Vincent Collyer, Jervis McEntee, Henry H. Brown, John M. Falconer, Robert Hoe, sr., Geo. Talbot Oliphant. Buried in Greenwood Cemetery.

Among the artists present were J. H. Dolph, Walter Satterlee, S. J. Gay, J. Q. A. Ward, D. M. Carter, J. E. Freeman, K. M. Pratt, W. H. Beard, J. G. Brown, M. F. H. DeHaas, W. H. Powell, Jerome Thompson, L. M. Wiles, Launt Thompson, Winslow

Robbins, A. W. Thomson, Wm. Morgan, G. H. McCord, J. F. Cropsey, Carl Muller, E. D. E. Greene, Wm. Page, Pres. of the Natl. Acad., T. Anderson Richards, John Williamson, Charles Calverly, J. W. Elminger, Wm. Oliver Stone, Alfred Jones, John Pope, Julian Scott, John LaFarge, H. A. Loup, David Johnson, Joseph Fagnam, R. Swayne Gifford, J. M. Falconer, J. H. Haws, Carl Brandt, A. F. Tate, Eastman Johnson, James H. Beard, A. H. Richie, Gilbert Burling, Pierrepont Bartow, J. C. Wiggins, Frost Johnson and A. H. Baldwin. The mother and sister of Mr. Kensett were also present. Resolutions of respect were adopted by the American artists in Rome, and in Florence, Italy. By the Artists' Fund Society of New York, and by the National Academy of Design.

Geo. H. Boughton, writing from London, Eng., says: "As an artist and as a man, he (Kensett) was as near perfection as possible. Others there are left, kind and good and gifted, but he had his particular charm and value, and it died with him, all too soon. Heaven rest him."

O. B. Frothingham, in Johnson's Cyclopaedia, says: "Kensett went to England in 1841, passed several years in England and Europe studying natural scenery in Switzerland, on the Rhine and in the mountains of the Abruzzi in Sicily, the Bay of Naples, among the Italian lakes, amid the scenery of the Campagna, and the associations of Rome. Always observing and faithfully transferring to the canvass his impressions. In 1848 returned to America and studied native scenery on the Atlantic sea coast, White Mountains, Adirondacks, Catskills, etc.

"A facile and diligent artist, well-trained, quick in perception and delicate of touch, he executed a great number of pictures singularly equal in merit and of a very high rank in excellence. His personal qualities of sincerity, modesty and purity made him beloved by many friends, and made his pictures dear to lovers of truth and feeling in art. His work commands the best prices. The collection of his sketches made for exhibition and sale after his death excited unusual interest. Mr. Kensett belonged to the realistic school as it is called, but was polished, harmonious, sweet and sympathetic. His portrait painted by his friend Baker, was engraved by Halpin, cabinet size for framing, and published by S. P. Avery, 86 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

"The auction sale of his pictures, in the Christian Association Hall, N. Y. city, commencing Monday evening and continuing during the five succeeding evenings, was one of the most remarkable and interesting that ever took place in this country. The amount realized was $137,715.40. Subsequently selections of thirty-eight paintings from his 'last summer's work' were purchased for the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art, and called the 'Kensett Memorial.' This collection is a permanent feature in the new Art Building in the Central Park."

At a special meeting of the Century association of the city of New York, Dec. 10, 1872, in relation to the death of Kensett, the following proceedings took place:

CENTURY CLUB EULOGIES.

Mr. Daniel Huntington presented and read the following minute:

As members of the Century Club, we have met with a severe loss by the death of our late fellow member, John F. Kensett. He possessed, eminently, those qualities which form the bond of our Union; a passion for art, a love of letters, the culture of a gentleman, the refined taste of an amateur, and a warm, affectionate heart, which gently won the love of all who knew him.

Into all the plans of the Club for the advancement of art, of literature and of social happiness, he entered with a zealous, self-sacrificing spirit and freely gave his time, his talents, and every aid in his power; and, more than all, he gave that cheery, hearty sympathy which kindled a flame in every other heart.

As an artist his rank was of the highest. He had that rare assemblage of qualities which combine to make a great painter; an enthusiastic love of beauty, a marvelous eye for color, a clear perception of form, a passion for his art, sustained by a calm, persistent patience in its pursuit and a hand obedient to his trained eye, a hand which expressed his thought with wondrous spirit and felicity.

To this was added sound, practical common sense, which held sway among these gifts from God. Perhaps the faculty which most distinguished him was coloring, which, always harmonious and refined, includes the atmosphere and the true sentiment of the hour and the scene as he feelingly rendered them. He delighted in silvery gray, and could send the mists drifting along the hillsides, make the mountain brook sparkle among the moss-grown rocks, or the sea-waves roll in on sandy beaches, or on rich-toned

The glow of sunset he often fondly dwelt on; he loved the solemnity of twilight; his autumnal hues are the full blaze of our October, but so tempered by his harmonizing hand as to delight and satisfy the eye.

The arts of our country have a rich inheritance in the treasures his genius has bequeathed, and it is to be hoped that many of them may be secured for our public galleries. The artists generally loved Kensett; they confided in him, for he was thoroughly trustworthy. He rejoiced in the success of others and cheered on the young artists by kind words and a helping hand. When a promising work appeared by a new hand, or improvement in an old one, his face would light up with pleasure. We sought for his criticisms, because he was both kind and sincere. He would gently point out errors and make suggestions which were invaluable, because his judgment was sound, his taste pure and discriminating. To the older and experienced artists he paid a modest deference, revered the great of the past and eagerly sought to profit by the study of the best works of all the schools, both old and new, that came within his reach.

These traits of the artist sprang from the basis of his character as a man; he was stamped with true manliness; the sweetest charity blended with all his actions; he was friendly at the bottom of his heart; gentle and amiable, yet firm as a rock when duty demanded it, forgiving of others' faults and condemning with severity only baseness and falsehood.

During his dangerous illness, soothed by the tender care of a sister and dear friends, we anxiously watched and prayed for his recovery. As he came gradually up to nearly his usual health we began to lift up thanksgivings to God, and as we gathered around him, expecting to see him once more take up his wonder-working pencil, suddenly a radiant hand touched him and he disappeared. To our sobs and entreaties there was no answer—except to the ear of Faith, an angelic voice saying. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Mr. Thomas Hicks moved the adoption of the minute, with these remarks :

Mr. President : More than a quarter of a century ago, in Italy, I made the acquaintance of John F. Kensett. He came to Rome in the month of November, 1845. In a few weeks after his arrival he was very ill of inflammatory rheumatism, through which illness it was my privilege to nurse him, and it was under the necessary intimacy of patient and nurse that our friendship began; and it was in this relation twenty-seven years afterwards it culminated and became transfigured.

As soon as he was able to work, he went at it with a will; and by the spring of '46 his portfolios were well filled with valuable studies.

Early in June he went to the Alban Mount, and began his out-door work in earnest. I joined him in July, and we worked side by side for three months, at Anicia, Genzano and Nemi, on the Alban Mount; at Corni, in the Volcan Mountains; and at Olevano, Civitella, Subiaco, Cervororo, Gennazzano and Palestrina, on the Sabine Mountains.

I left him at Palestrina early in October, to arrange for winter quarters, and he went back to Subiaco, and walked through the Valley Anio by Gerano to Tivoli, and thence to Rome, about the 1st of November. From that time till the following spring we had a studio and apartments together.

He left Rome with George Wm. Curtis and other friends to visit Naples and its vicinity.

Towards midsummer, they came north; and in the latter days of July, '47, I joined Kensett, Geo. Curtis and his brother, at Florence, and went to Venice. We staid there through the month of August. Work, work, work, was always the order, and Kensett's Venetian studies will be found to day among hundreds of others in his studio.

We parted our Italian life at Padua; the Curtis went to Germany, Kensett to Paris and I returned to Rome.

Early in the winter of '48, Kensett was in New York at work. It was at this time that he was elected a member of the Century. I had many letters from him during that winter and the spring following; they were very frank with regard to his needs and struggles.

The spring exhibition of the National Academy of Design is opened; two of his works are there; he wrote to me at Paris:

"My two pictures in the academy are sold to a gentleman in Providence: Hurra! but I can't get the money till the exhibition closes in July; Vive la Bagatelle!"

His reputation was established, and from that time to the present his success was known to all lovers of art, common to you and me alike.

It is not for me to eulogize my departed brother; our relation was too near, too sacred for that.

His noble and beautiful spirit is deeply impressed upon the memories of all who knew him, and most deeply upon the memories of those who knew him best; while, from his manifold works this spirit not only speaks to us, but they shall be the living witnesses of his truthful and gentle nature to generations yet unborn.

His name has passed quietly into history; his fame is fixed; and the dust is already gathered upon the implements of his art.

It may truly be said of him:

"None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise."

Mr. President, with a heart full of sorrow I move the adoption of the minute which has been presented.

In seconding the motion for the adoption of the minute, Mr. John Gourlie spoke as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Century:

The Board of Management, through the Secretary, has requested me to offer some remarks on this occasion.

I can add nothing to the generous eulogies bestowed upon the memory of Mr. Kensett by the public press and the voices of his friends; he deserved the praises he has received.

A pure-hearted man—amiable—ingenious and generous in his nature. Of all the men I have ever known he possessed the most admirable qualities; he was a man without guile.

My acquaintance with Mr. Kensett began a long time ago in an official way; as treasurer of the Art Union I had corresponded with him, but our more intimate acquaintance commenced on his second return from Europe.

I find his name recorded Dec. 6, 1850, as a guest of the Sketch Club, on the minute books of that society, of which I was the Secretary. On that evening, his first visit there, his friend, F. O. C. Darley, had been unanimously elected a member.

Mr. Kensett on that occasion was greeted and welcomed with great cordiality by us all. His handsome face, his bright eye, beamed with cheerfulness as he found himself again among his old friends, in his native home.

In looking over the report of the Art Union for 1849 I find a list of his works which were distributed to the members that year. They are as follows, viz.:

"Anio—A scene near Subiaco," "Passing Shower," "A Beech Grove, near Windsor Forest," "A Landscape," "Environs of Ithaca," "Raven Hill, Elizabethtown, N. J.," "Trout Stream" and "Study from Nature."

In October, 1851, Mr. Kensett was elected a member of the Sketch Club, and at this time my intimate acquaintance with him began. I was often at his studio, and have been the pleased observer of his thoughtful and laborious industry. He was an untiring laborer in his art, and loved it with the true devotion of an earnest student of nature.

As one of the earliest and most faithful founders of the Artists' Fund Society (in connection with his friend, Mr. Falconer, the honored custodian of his funds, and many others of his brother artists), he always evinced a most active and generous interest in its prosperity and success. There was a modest yet generous charity in his heart, which every friend of his acknowledged and recognized. His hand was always open, as we all know, to the claims of his brethren who needed kindly acts. The following is a copy of a letter I received from him, now in my possession. It is characteristic of the man:

"Gignoux tells me you can dispose of more tickets for the Artists' Fund Exhibition, and I send you therefore twenty-five additional. If you can, without trouble, scatter them around to souls greedy of intellectual feasts, you will do a double service in aiding you friends of the Artists' Fund. Truly yours,

J. F. KENSETT."

Ever active and energetic in whatever he undertook to do, there was in him a quiet perseverance which attracted but little attention from others, but which was most effectual in its results.

I know of many acts of his kindness which resulted in much good to those they were designed to aid.

During the Rebellion, when the Metropolitan fair was proposed, he took a lively interest in its success. He was made chairman of the art committee, and in conjunction with many of our friends of the Century Club and the Union League, whose names I need not mention, it proved one of the most successful departments of that great enterprise. That committee paid to the fund for the relief of the soldiers of our army, the sum of eighty-four thousand dollars.

I know that Kensett, if living, would not claim for himself any undue share of the merit of this success, nor will I claim it for him, for he had ardent and patriotic colleagues as earnest as himself in the cause; but this I do know, that his heart was filled with pride that his countrymen appreciated the labors of his committee, and illustrated their patriotism in this splendid reward. These, gentlemen, are my remembrances of the useful life of our friend.

His place in the history of the fine arts of our country will be, if it has not already been, determined by the public opinion of his countrymen. That he worked with conscientious fidelity, that he studied nature with a loving heart, that his hand was never idle in the fulfillment of all the duties of his great mission, and that he has left an honored name and memory which will be long cherished, all will believe.

But my task would be imperfectly performed if I failed to say something of that marvelous industry which enabled him to accomplish so much.

There is hardly a parlor or a private or public gallery in our city, and I might say in our country, that does not contain one or more of the productions of Mr. Kensett's hand. A catalogue of them would fill a volume.

His works are spread widely over the country. They adorn the princely palaces of the wealthy. They cheer the humbler homes of the more quiet and unobtrusive lovers of art for its own sake. How many a cheering ray of beauty, awakened by his pencil, has illuminated with a kindly influence the home of many a lover of the "serene and silent art!"

It is a pleasing contemplation that his works, like the songs of the bards, have inspired a love of beauty and of nature in the modest homes of our people, as in the gilded galleries of the proud; and what a benign influence is reflected therefrom! To touch the heart of a nation is the sublime triumph of genius.

If our friend has forever passed away, the quiet brook, the tranquil meadow, the cool shade of the forest, the ascending hills and the lofty mountains—radiant with the beams of the rising or the setting sun, illustrated by his skillful pencil—still remain to us.

It is no evanescent fame that follows such industry as this I speak of.

In his own studio, where he labored with devotion and constancy, and died, we may say, with his pencil in his hand; I am told, there are more than five hundred of his studies and finished works upon its walls.

All this has not been accomplished without thought and labor—labor that has cheered our hearts and homes as the sun-light and the breeze bring health to our cheeks.

And, who can say what pleasant influences these, his labors, may exert upon the mind and taste of the generations that are to follow ours?

This tribute of our gratitude to him for these gifts we render, not only without reluctance, but with a pride in our knowledge of his character and in the earnest purposes of his unpretending life.

Kensett, in the true sense of the word, was a poet. How could it be otherwise? His intercourse with nature, his rambles in the fields and forests, and by streams "that make the meadows green," made him one, and when he returned to his studio from his out-door work, he came, not only with the freshness of the sun and breeze upon his noble brow, but with a more exhilarating freshness in his heart, which only a true lover of nature can feel.

The skillful hand hath lost its cunning. The bowl is broken at the fountain.

We alone are left to record the evidences of our respect and affection for the private virtues and useful public life of our distinguished friend.

The Rev. Dr. Bellows then addressed the meeting in these words:

When I entered this room I had no expectation of participating in this solemn commemoration, otherwise than a mute presence among you; but at the request of the secretary I am permitted to add my voice to that of brethren who have paid careful and impressive tributes to Mr. Kensett's talents and worth. I can add little to what much more competent judges and much closer friends have offered, in estimating his genius and character; for unlike them, I am neither skilled in art, nor had I the pleasure of standing in such intimate and familiar relations to Mr. Kensett as would make my testimony of special value. It is true I had the honor of being a co-member with our departed friend, and with the gentlemen who have spoken of him, of that delightful and memorable association—the Sketch Club—never to be named without gratitude and regret—and for twenty years was in the habit of meeting Mr. Kensett once a fortnight for six months in the year, in the charming reunions of that most fascinating of artistic associations. But Mr. Kensett, from his modesty and retiring disposition, and from an apparent indifference to general conversation—which may have been only a preference for work over talk—was not in the habit, at least with me, of opening himself much on such occasions. Still he did not fail to leave a distinct mark of fine intelligence, kindness and worth, and won my high respect and esteem. Indeed, his personality was such as to make an identical impression on all discerning persons who knew him, however slightly. We may sometime even be too near to take in the truest general effect of a man's character, and I am inclined to think that those a little removed often get a fairer and juster view of a public man, than his most intimate friends.

It is certainly true of Mr. Kensett that he succeeded in leaving on the public and friends, nearer or remote, a unique and identical image. So balanced, harmonious, quiet, cheerful and modest was he, that his talents and character presented little to perplex or differ about. Either as to his genius as an artist, or his worth as a man, or his total characteristics in both lights, there was less variety of opinion than in respect to almost any man of equal eminence. His sweetness of disposition, ready sympathy, lively appreciation of the merits of fellow artists, humility in regard to his own works, delicacy of feeling and prudence of speech, made him a universal favorite among his brother painters, and a person always welcome, and always praised. I do not recollect ever to have heard him spoken of with disparagement, and hardly with critical coolness, in his artistic character, and never caught a lisp of displeasure or censure in regard to his character. His generosity disarmed criticism; his geniality paralyzed jealousy and suspicion; his gentleness and candor drew all the venom out of rivalry. I doubt if any artist has succeeded more perfectly in escaping the besetting weakness of his vocation—the egotism, vanity, jealousy and partisanship which are apt to belong to callings that provoke emulation, live by rivalry and invite constant censure or praise. Certainly, every profession or vocation has its own special exposures for character, and it need not be concealed that the poetic and artistic temperament, owing its peculiar power not a little to the sensitiveness of the cerebral organization, is peculiarly liable to mental agitation and even personal acerbity.

The irritable genus has been of old its designation, and candid minds both expect and allow for a somewhat painful sensibility in all men engaged in æsthetic pursuits. Now, Mr. Kensett, overlooking and pardoning weaknesses of this origin in others, seemed to need no charity for himself. With all the delicacy and sensibility essential to fine feeling and exquisite manipulation, he had little or none of the irritability or oversensitiveness of his class; and his profession served only as a finer background for the calmness and equilibrium and sweetness of his personal habits, while his fine moral qualities entered into his works, sobered his artistic judgment and chastened his style.

It was, perhaps, this harmony of nature and powers, that made Mr. Kensett so judicious in the use of his talents. He had none of that "vaunting ambition that o'erleaps itself," nothing of that impetuous passion for great achievements, which is often unaccompanied by the power of successful performance. Far be it from me to dispraise or undervalue a bold and daring temperament in art. Probably no man can attain the first rank without it. First-class genius is always courageous and soaring; nay it is versatile and various. It attempts many things, fails in many things, but at last succeeds greatly, and sometimes in many ways. But below the very first-class (and how few can belong there?) there is nothing more fortunate in an artist, than a just and modest appreciation of his own powers—an exact measurement of the limits of his faculties, and a cultivated instinct for the legitimate sphere within which his executive faculties lie. To possess an imagination or fancy far greater than one's eye or hand can realize in form and color, is certainly a not uncommon cause of disappointment and unhappiness, and produces wasteful effort and serious failure in Art and life. Mr. Kensett was specially happy in a just estimate of his own faculties. His genius, pure, delicate, poetic, was limited within a moderate range. He early discovered where his powers ended, and did not beat against the bars that imprisoned him. He discovered the few fine notes in the long artistic gamut, which he could sound with clearness and effect, and kept striking them with an ever more skilled, delicate and successful finger.

Unsurpassed among American artists in an eye for color, and a hand skillful and masterly in choosing and applying pigments—decisive and effective in his touch, he had an exquisite sense of the beauty and significance of certain tones in our American atmosphere, and certain combinations of the sky, water, rocks and trees upon our rivers and coasts, which became life-long studies, and form the subjects of all his characteristic works. There was a certain monotony in his subjects—a want of broad daylight and bright inspiring tonic power—an absence of creative invention or surprising effects—but it was well supplied by something approaching perfection in the themes he habitually treated—and by the delicacy, elegance and unexaggerated quality of his rendering. And while his style is his own and not to be mistaken, he was not a mannerist in a bad sense. He loved Nature too sincerely and devoutly, he distrusted his attainments and criticised his own work too freely and carefully to become enamored of himself and his performances, or buried in his own furrow. On the contrary, one of the most diligent, painstaking and laborious of artists, he went on improving to the last, and those who will compare his pictures at the period when he acquired his great reputation, with his very last, will see how much he grew in grace and in unity—how wonderfully he harmonized and perfected his manner, and finished his pictures, without finishing them away.

But it is delightful to feel that it is even more as a man than as an artist that we shall miss him; for this means that he lived to the true ends of life, and on leaving his pencil and studies behind him, has gone where his real "works will follow him."

What a testimony to his character and the hold he had on his fellow artists, and on the cultivated portion of New York and Brooklyn, was given at his funeral! When have so many men of mark and worth met over the bier of any man not the representative of political or military station? The snow storm that raved could not repress delicate women and busy men whose personal affections drew them to the spot where the last view of his handsome, delicate and genial face was to be sadly taken. And how he met us in his coffin! He seemed still himself—well, only asleep—so young, and fresh and fair, that it was quite impossible to associate his real age, or decay and death, with his remains. May it foretoken the freshness in which his memory will be held in this club—so familiar and dear a place to his feet—the undying hold he will keep by his pictures, both on the country and the art he loved enthusiastically and served to the last breath, and the eternal youth into which his pure and gentle spirit has already ascended.

In conclusion, the Rev. Dr. Osgood made some remarks upon what we all owe to our artists as educators of taste, and especially upon the relation of our landscape painters to the higher culture of our age. It is not wise, he thought, to treat them as specialists, apart from the great movements of letters and humanity. They belong to the noble company of thoughtful and gifted men, who have felt that there is a spirit in all creation, and that nature is the great temple of life. Mr. Kensett belongs, in his way, to that tendency of the modern mind that has given us Goethe and Burns, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Tennyson, and our own Bryant and Emerson.

We need such interpreters of nature to soothe, and cheer, and elevate us. We live too much in the crowd; we are too much worried and worn by work and by care. We are vastly helped by closer communion with the woods and waters, the mountains and meadows, the clouds and the stars. The new and remarkable development of landscape art among us is meeting a great want in our intense life, and there have never been such painters of nature as our century has shown, and our country has done her part to produce.

He thought that Mr. Kensett had limitations in his genius, as all artists have. He was not as romantic as Cole, nor had he the transfiguring imagination and the grand historical vision of Turner. But in his way he was admirable, so truthful in his report of natural objects, so strong and faithful in his work, so affectionate in his temper and tone. He was a "classic among our artists, free from all the prevailing or tempting excesses. He had not the wearisome detail of a certain antique school, nor the dreamy indefiniteness of the new sentimentalism. He had the severe truthfulness of the engraver's art, which he once adorned, and he was no stranger to the poet's feelings and fancy. There was not a little of Wordsworth's temperament and gift in his work, and his many and various productions are this painter's "Excursion," the result of his studies of nature and the world, the pencilled poems which will live after him.

Dr. Osgood threw out some thoughts upon the manner in which the landscape painter puts his personal life and character into his works, and calls men together in thoughtful and generous fellowship among the scenes which he presents to them, and also how he shows the affinity between the universe and the Eternal Spirit, and lifts all things up towards the Supreme Mind. Mr. Kensett may not have had the most exalted inspiration, nor ascended to the beatific vision of God in nature as some others had done, but he surely saw the rising stairway from earth to heaven, and all his landscapes invite us to live in the peace that is not of this world. So in his way he is a preacher.

In sending this outline of his remarks Dr. Osgood adds, that he has since examined Mr. Kensett's works more fully and that he has had the privilege of seeing in full the sketches and pictures which are the product of this last season's labor.

"This is certainly a memorable result of a summer's work, and this legacy of the artist is a worthy memorial of the man. These pictures treat very familiar subjects, scenes very near to his own door, and he handles them with great simplicity and without any flights of fancy or straining after dramatic effects. Here are God's common and abounding gifts—the water, the rocks, the trees, the light, the sky—all rendered with severe truthfulness, yet with exquisite beauty and delicate and profound expression. I make no claim to be a critic of art; I am content to be a lover, who may kneel at the shrine without presuming to minister at the altar; yet I certainly can say that these works seem to have characteristics of greatness; and that as a colorist he may be named with the masters of his art; and whilst others may have more boldness of touch and more sweep of imagination, he has as much truth and purity, and delicacy as any of them. These pictures are a cycle of sonnets of nature; a string of precious poems of our common lot, and they help us in that great task of practical wisdom which finds blessings in our daily path and sees God's love everywhere.

"I have lived for over twenty years within a short distance of Kensett's summer-house and I have watched month after month the effects of earth and sky and water, which he treats. His rendering to them is satisfactory, suggestive and imposing; he has perpetuated upon his canvas moods of the sea and the sky that seemed to me to have passed away with the moment that originated them; and his remarkable studies of cloud and sky under all changing hues and combinations, from sunrise to sunset, seem like the vision of the face of a departed friend, a restoration of the very countenance, with its light and form, its thought and feeling. Certainly, if a man can bequeath light to those who come after him, Kensett has left a legacy of light to us all—of light, too, that is all instinct with feeling, all alive with love and apparently with a sense of deepening seriousness as the evening shadows drew on.

"The rocks in our neighborhood are frequent and characteristic. He has not treated the most remarkable of them, but he has sought the more quiet and soothing rather than the more weird and exciting; but he has rendered them in a wonderful way. Under his touch we see the marvel of the Egyptian sands reappearing on the shore of our great Sound, and that stone looks upon you with the face of the Sphinx. That rock whispers to you the secret of earth, and sea and sky. Its surface speaks out the mysterious life of nature, which glows in that rich color like blood in the cheek; and those stains, and seams and mosses are the impressions which ages have left upon that stony face under the changes of the air, and water and light. This Sphinx means more than we can understand, and her features and look so faithfully report her colloquy for thousands of years with the sea and the winds.

"Perhaps his most remarkable picture in this series is that which presents the sea under the sunlight, with nothing else to divide the interest—no land or sail, no figure and not even a noticeable cloud to give peculiar effect, or a rock to provoke the dash of the waves. It is pure light and water, a bridal of the sea and sky. Is it presumption in a poor novice in art like me to say that this is a great picture?

"Next to this in power and suggestiveness seems to me to be his picture of a cliff by the shore, with shrubs and a grove and figures above, and the whole surmounted by a noble pine tree, that stretches out its limbs towards the sea. It is a charming scene, and combines great carefulness and severe truth with beauty and sentiment. Since the artist sketched it, this tree has died, and if we may hold the poet's faith that every flower enjoys the air it breathes, we may suppose this forest king to have breathed his last not without comfort in that his ripe glory had been so vividly perpetuated upon this canvas. The tree has gone, and the painter has gone, but the bloom of their last summer now lives in the treasure house of art, which ought not to be far from the Kingdom of God."

The minute presented by Mr. Huntington was then adopted, and ordered to be entered on the records, and an account of the proceedings to be prepared for publication, together with the following sketch of Mr. Kensett, written by Mr. George W. Curtis for Harper's Magazine, and taken, by his permission, from its pages:

In the course of many years' monthly chatting and chronicling, the Easy Chair has had occasion often to speak a word of regretful farewell to some whom all men honored and loved, and to some known only to a smaller circle. It is pleasant to think that, on some day hereafter, when this century is ended and we are all gone, and the new world that follows us wonders over the quaint ways and amusing conceits of their ancestors, some kind and curious soul, turning over the yellow pages of some odd volume of this magazine, will come upon the name of Paul Duggan, and thank the Easy Chair for a glimpse of that perhaps else forgotten bright and genial nature. But, gentle reader of that distant day, when your eyes fall upon this page, know that the few words which the Easy Chair is about to write cannot show you, as they fain would, the sweet and cheerful and serene soul which henceforth lives for us only in memory and in his beautiful pictures.

Rome changes so little from year to year that the spacious studio in which the Easy Chair first saw Kensett doubtless still remains, and is occupied perhaps by some young worker at the easel, who hears the same old constant ringing of church bells, and who climbs the hill over the studio at evening to see the sun setting and St. Peter's steeped in the rosy light. It was upon the Via Margutta, a little back from the street, and Kensett shared the studio with his life long friend, Thomas Hicks. There in the happy days they studied and painted, and there was always the lively welcome for the mere loungers, youths making the grand tour, and excellent seniors who came to Rome with families and traveling carriages, the bland dispensers of commissions. All that Kensett was in the latter days—ever bright, tranquil, sympathetic, modest, generous, manly—he was in the Roman days, more than twenty years ago. Never peevish, never selfish, scorning to solicit in any way, self-reliant, trusting himself and the future, how plainly he seems to stand at this moment, stepping back a little from the easel, turning his head and studying the effect of every touch, while a soft, lovely landscape of summer peace brightens his canvas!

There was the usual sign of artists of all kinds in Rome, one of whom, the oldest resident, Robert Macpherson, who married Mrs. Jameson's niece, and who chanced upon the famous Sebastien del Piombo, died just before Kensett. We all dined at the Lepre and probably ate more than our peck of —. But what a flavor it had! Hark! That is the "boss" waiter. "Ecco! Signore, vengo, vengo! Eccomi qua!" What guests does the bustling Muzio serve now? and what viands? Do the unwary still expect broth when they order Zuppa Inglese? Does the tradition of Mezzo Sbrinzio yet linger? And Calcedonio, with his smooth, fair face, who needed only the heavy vine chaplet to be Antinous himself, in what celestial trattoria does he now come smiling in, holding high piles of plates aloft?

From the Lepre we crossed to the Cafe Greco. It was famous ground, for Thorwaldsen had sat there sipping his black coffee, and Gibson was sometimes seen in our day. We sat in the narrow, dark room called the omnibus. We paid two baiocchi or pennies for a tumbler of coffee. How we smoked! How we talked and laughed! What good things were said at the Lepre! Because there was a Mermaid, shall there be no other cakes and ale? How plain it was! How dingy! And were ever more satisfaction, more pleasure, and richer memories bought at a cheaper rate? And among all the famous loiterers at the Greco was there ever a kinder, simpler, sweeter companion than Kensett? He was not fluent. He told few stories. But his generous sympathy, his interested attention, was inspiration. He made a sunshine that harmonized and softened all. Is there a Greco still? The old dingy room must have gone. But if by any chance it remains, let its frequenters of to-day cherish it more because of that gentle presence long ago.

Was it to the Piazza and to the round game of pool at the billiard table that we afterward repaired? There is not a gilded fledgling of a New York club that would not have smiled at our small skill. But the Easy Chair watches the splendid games of to-day and sees no gayer players. There are jokes, there are incidents from those old games of pool still current among those innocent gamesters grown gray. There are characters, figures, movements, that are still irresistible in memory. Those Roman hours of youth are bonds still among men whose lives are widely severed and who have no other interests in common. Christopher Sly and old John Naps of Greece are names merely—so are Leafchild and the fat British troubadour. He played the guitar and threw up his round, blue eyes and his pudgy fingers as he trolled a sentimental ditty. And what awful stories he told afterward! That fat troubadour told tales of English social life which, if they were true, are such as Mrs. Aphra Behn would have delighted to record, but which, probably for the honor of human nature, none of the hearers believed.

There were tea-parties, also, in the rooms of the bachelors up many and many a flight of stone stairs. The nearer the roof the nearer heaven. Nor was there any disturbing fear, as in the splendid modern cities. There was no burning in Rome, that is, no burning of houses. There had been other kinds formerly, and according to some serious preached there, there was immense preparation for firing up hereafter. There were bachelor tea-parties; tea, with a little hot spiced wine; simple wine, you under stand—Velletri, and other vineyards of the neighboring hills. Not one of that set of foreign Romans did the Easy Chair ever see as he should not be, by reason of wine. One night there was a symposium at the rooms of Kensett and Hicks. It was a pleasant, merry, singing, not roystering, feast; tea in large cups, without milk, and a dash of Velletri somewhere during the evening. And somehow it came to be midnight, and as Time is always pushing on, he began to mow the tender stalks of morning hours, and still the tea was hot, and still there was one more glass of spiced Velletri, and another song when there was a knock at the door.

It was an hour when only doctors or the police knock, and there was some wonder. But the youngest comer said, quietly, "I think that must be Cousin Timothy." The youngest comer was new to Rome, and was stopping with his cousin, who served the god of regularity, and who vexed and alarmed by the nocturnal truancy of a tyro, came forth to seek him. When the door was opened the admonishing figure of Timothy appeared, holding a coil of wax taper in his hand to light his way, and it also revealed the spruce trimness of his attire. "It's time to come home," said Timothy, gravely—and he was in the right. But the youngest comer replied, calmly, "Cousin Timothy, henceforth I think that all baggage had better be at the risk of the owner." It was decisive. Timothy politely withdrew and hunted no more erring lambs before light.

From Rome there was a long and happy journey with Kensett to Naples and Pæstum and Amalfi, Ischia and the Blue Grotto. Then again for a few summer days to Rome, and slowly northward to Florence. After a month at Florence, where Mr. and Mrs. Browning then were, we passed across the Appenines by Bologna and Ferrara to Venice. In September we came through Lombardy, and one soft evening, at Varona, Kensett climbed into the banquet of the diligence, and reaching down his hand, we who remained shook it heartily, and bade him Godspeed for America. During all that Italian time Kensett was constantly at work, and with wonderful little waste. He would pass a day faithfully studying and painting a mullein. His sketches were so vivid and faithful and delicate that afterward there was no wall in New York so beautiful as that of his old studio, at the top of the Waverley House, on the corner of Broadway and Fourth street, upon which they were hung in a solid mass.

He returned home to a series of noiseless victories. He was a recognized master of landscape, and all his pictures are biographical, for they reveal the fidelity, the tenderness, and the sweet serenity of his nature. Universally beloved, he was always welcome. He did not live to be an old man; but although he had turned the half century corner, he seemed no older in heart and sympathy and the fresh faith that illuminates life with celestial radiance, in the studio upon the Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street where he died, than in the old Roman room in the Via Margutta long ago. Somewhat lonely he must sometimes have been, but no one probably ever heard from him a sigh of regret, or the least impatient wish that life might have been different. As those who personally knew him die, his eventless life will pass from memory, but his lovely character will still live on in his pictures, and mingle unconsciously to those who grow beneath the spell of their beauty, with other lives and characters in a hundred homes. So the influence of a good man is not lost; and so will it forever inspire that faith in the divine goodness which was peculiarly that of this beloved artist.

"For Nature ever faithful is
To such as trust her faithfulness.
When the forest shall mislead me,
When the night and morning lie,
When the sea and land refuse to feed me,
'Twill be time enough to die;
Then will yet my mother yield
A pillow in her greenest field,
Nor the June flowers scorn to cover
The clay of their departed lover."

We would like here to interpose our defense against a possible misconception. There is, or was, a widely prevalent notion, that the motive and object of family history is the gratification of family pride. In some instances, we are sorry to say, it may be so, and the genealogist is peculiarly liable to that imputation, because in his brief chronicles of the achievements of his kindred, he may seem to entertain an undue respect for success. The world is full of hero worship, of Mammon worship, and of other and even baser forms of idolatry. Eminent position, social rank, fame and wealth hold the highest places in the estimation of multitudes, and command their sincerest adoration. We are not of that mind, and while we do not seek to undervalue the advantages of worldly success, or to underate the energies and the strength and persistency of purpose it generally requires, it seems to us that its motives are not of the highest; that its objects are low, illusive and unsatisfying; that its pursuit is apt to call into active exercise and quick development a train of ignoble qualities; and that its attainment too often begets luxury, selfishness, hardness of heart, pride and vainglory. Therefore, while we are willing to give all the credit that is due to success, we are not willing to be accounted as among the train of its worshippers. There are men worthy of the greatest esteem the sum of whose worldly possessions would not pay the cost of a rich man's feast, whose names are not adorned with titles, professional, honorary or of courtesy, are not found in histories or biographical dictionaries, nor in the lists of office holders, nor among the "locals" of the contemporary newspaper, nor inscribed on monuments or corner lamps of the street; men, in short, who have not succeeded, and, perhaps from lack of motive, have not tried to succeed, and whose lives are almost as obscure as the oblivion into which they sink at death. Of this class are those of whom it has been said, "The world knows not its greatest men," and of whom it might be said, The world knows not its best men. As a representative of this class, and as an example, we think, of the most worthy manhood, we desire to speak briefly of him whose name stands at the head of this article, whose character we have learned to revere and love from a study of those little things that ordinarily would not be deemed worthy of recollection or of notice: a life and character paralleled no doubt by hundreds in these pages, unknown to us, whose meagre record,

"Like the one
Stray fragment of a wreck which blown
With the lost vessel's name ashore,
Tells who they were that live no more."

It has been truly said that a perfect honesty is rare among men. Honesty of the common sort is not inconsistent with great injustice, and with taking every unfair advantage within the bounds of law and custom. Has the man of millions given an equivalent for his wealth? Perfect honesty is another name for justice. The distance between common honesty and honesty in the true sense is infinite. Common honesty enables men to deal with each other. Perfect honesty enables them to respect each other. It is simply the golden rule. A just man made perfect is companion and equal with the saints. In all his dealings, Uri Tuttle was governed by the golden rule. His equanimity and contentment of mind was remarkable. He seemed devoid of passions. Envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness, ambition, greed, the lust of power and distinction were unknown to him; temperate in all things and serenely patient. During the 12 years comprising the period of his second marriage he never spoke an unkind or impatient word to his wife; nor would he ever permit a child to be scolded or struck; for he did not believe that to spare the rod was to spoil the child, but that more often than otherwise, the rod was the weapon of an impatient and despotic temper than the aid of a calm and wise authority. And he was right, at least as to his own. "His heart," said one who knew him well, "was as big as his whole body," meaning that his whole nature was permeated with the quality of tenderness. In him was embodied the Douglass motto, "Tender and true." In the common affairs of life his judgment was excellent and his advice much sought by his neighbors in perplexity. He was much given to meditation and reverie, and often when so absorbed would talk to himself in an almost inaudible tone while performing at the same time some mechanical labor. Of the subjects or quality of his meditations we have no positive knowledge; but may reasonably infer as to the first, that they were such as force themselves on the attention of all thinking men who are not crazed with the passions and blinded with the strife for temporal things—the problems of life and the mysteries of time and eternity. The remark so often made with regard to the literary life is even more true of this; it is lacking in incident; he was contented with his lot and anxious only to do right, leaving others to pursue what phantoms and shadows they would, and when the final summons came he was not afraid, nor greatly desirous to ward it off, nor over solicitous about himself, his future, his salvation, leaving that with God, but his last thoughts and words related to the welfare of his young children, and were as noble in spirit as any that have been thought worthy to be perpetuated in monumental stone or bronze.

VI. Charles, b. Oct. 3, 1815; suffered nearly all his life from ill health; d. in Cincinnati, O., Oct. 23, 1864, a. 49; unm.; buried in Spring Grove cemetery. A great reader, of sound judgment, superior intelligence and of an extraordinary purity, integrity and elevation of character. This is the unanimous testimony of all who ever knew him, even from a child. In the line of duty and in defense of right, he was fearless, and of an unconquerable resolution, though naturally of a peaceable and quiet disposition. It is remembered that when a boy of about twelve years of age he was brought home on a shutter, insensible and covered with blood. In old times in N. Hav., as elsewhere in large towns, before the organization of a paid police force, the pugnacity of young humanity of the masculine gender vented itself in frequent street fights. Boys formed themselves into gangs offensive and defensive, and were known collectively by the name of the street or neighborhood where they lived and had their being. Sometimes pitched battles were fought between rival gangs, and then woe to the windows of adjacent buildings, which generally suffered far more than the belligerents themselves, arms of precision not being in use among them. But the favorite mode of warfare was the Napoleonic trick of concentrating a superior force on a weak point of the enemy; that is, to ambush a stray urchin found on forbidden ground, and with a preponderating force of five or six to one, give him an unmerciful thrashing. In this they also resembled the dogs of Constantinople, and the verisimilitude is worth noting in relation to the law of evolu-

For this simple act of humanity Hine was much endeared to the tribe of the rescued Indian, who believed that the Great Spirit would always watch over and protect the good white-face and his posterity. What the inimical tribe thought on this point is not recorded.

Hamilton to Dayton and until prostrated by the the fever of the climate and compelled when convalescing to return to the East to recuperate, had charge of construction as division engineer. Soon afterwards he surveyed a line across the "Great Bend" of the Susquehanna, from Binghamton to Harpersville, for the Albany & Susq. Railroad. In 1851 he had charge as principal assistant engineer of surveys from Cincinnati, O., to St. Louis, Mo., for the O. & M. R. R., comprising a year of laborious field work, camping out a part of the time to avoid greater hardships. The country was new and comparatively unsettled. In 1852 he surveyed and located the Cincinnati & Dayton Short Line R. R., the construction of which was begun, but soon stopped by the opposition of the rival corporation and want of adequate funds. Some twenty years later the line was completed and put in operation. He afterwards surveyed and made approximate locations for the Cincinnati, Lebanon & Zenia R. R.; the "Four Mile Valley" R. R., from Hamilton, O., to Richmond, Ind.; the Sciota Valley R. R., from Columbus, O., to Circleville, and of the Atlantic & Ohio R. R., eastward from Columbus toward the Penn. state line. A part of this line was under contract when the R. R. panic, induced by the Schuyler frauds, caused the immediate suspension of new R. R. enterprises, and a long stagnation ensued.

In 1855, he removed to New York city, and began the wholesale book subscription business in connection with Henry Howe of Cincinnati, O., which proved quite successful notwithstanding the panic of '57 and the tremendous political agitations preceding the war, until the war itself destroyed as by an earthquake almost every occupation that was not connected in some way with the support or the destruction of human life. In 1868 he joined the "Stowe Association" and was led into some genealogical investigations. The interest thus excited in the maternal lineage and relationships, naturally and speedily extended to paternal side and finally resulted in this compilation; m. in N. Hav., by Rev. *Dea. Thomas Snell and his brother Melville, rem. from Ware to Sturbridge, Worcester Co., Mass., and in 1842 began the manuf. of bits and augers in Wright village. In 1847 Town & Chaffee built a large brick shop to make the same goods with steam power, which was purchased by the Snell brothers. In 1852 their old mill was burnt, and the same year a new building 100x32 feet, and two stories high was erected on the site. In 1853 the Snell Co. built two stone mills 45x100 and 26x46 respectively, and other buildings for dwellings, laid out new streets and spent $30,000 in improvements. In 1854 they employed some 75 hands. In 1857 the financial manager of the firm, Otis Snell, s. of Dea. Thomas, d. This year was disastrous to the hardware trade generally, and many firms were swept away, but the Snell company weathered the storm until 1860 when they failed and the business passed into the hands of John W. Draper who conducted it until 1863 when Clark & Wilson, an old hardware firm in New York city and E. L. Bates of Fiskdale, bought the entire business and organized under the name of "The Snell Manuf. Co.," which has continued until the present time (1880). During the progress of the war many goods were furnished to various departments of the government by this concern, and it continued to prosper until the panic of 1873, after which for a few years the trade was very much diminished, though the company kept their works in operation and maintained the credit acquired by the Snell brothers of making the best goods in the market. Its sales in some years have exceeded $100,000 and its goods are sold in many countries, in Europe, Australia, Brazil and Cuba in addition to all parts of the U. At the age of 19, spring of 1856, went west, entered the service of the Am. Fur Co.; headquarters about the mouth of the Yellowstone River, 1,500 miles from white settlements. Soon learned the languages of the different tribes and was appointed the first Indian agent for the Sioux nation. The Indians constantly at war, his partner murdered and several attempts upon his own life induced him to resign. He then started for the Nevada mines, upon reaching which the Rebellion broke out and he enlisted as a private in the 2d Regt. Cal. Vols.; serving through all the intermediate grades he became Acting Asst. Adj.-Gen. with the rank of Major. His experience as a frontiersman becoming known to the old army officers he was thenceforth employed until the end of the war against the Indians on the plains and in Texas, Arizona, Washington Ter., Oregon and Nevada. He then went to Mexico and was appointed Col. in the Mexican army under Gen. Vega; but a short experience in that service sufficed to make evident the superior attractions of private American citizenship. Now (1878) res. in San Francisco, Cal.; m. there Aug. 22, 1868, Alice E. Cheney, b. in Indiana Jan. 27, 1852; only child Zoe Lolie, b. The San Francisco Post, weekly and daily, of Aug. 15, 1878, says: "Little Zoe Tuttle, the pretty and piquant little girl whose precocious talent is so familiar to our theatre goers, goes east in charge of her mother to star in 'All for

Gold' and other pieces. The qualities which have made her so much of a favorite here will doubtless secure her future success." The Chicago Tribune of Nov. 16, 1879, says: "Zoe Tuttle the 'Little Buttercup' of Haverly's Juvenile Pinafore company was last night presented with a gold medal, a tribute tendered her by professional admirers of her rendition of the character. The medal is very beautiful and has the following inscription: 'To the best Little Buttercup from her professional admirers, Chicago, Nov. 15, 1879.' In the centre is a raised design of a buttercup." During the winter of 1880 she played 'Eva' in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' at Booth's Theatre, N. Y. C., Garrett & Palmer, lessees. The play had a run of several weeks. 2. GERTRUDE ABIGAIL, b. In Cheshire he was neighbor to Andrew Hull Foote [4], who always regarded him with affection and esteem. 9237. Noah Tuttle, b. Dec. 18, 1744; rem. to Camden, N. Y., 1795, and in 1798 himself and wf. were members of Mr. Steele's chh. of Paris Hill. On the 19th of Feb., 1798, eight members of Mr. Steele's chh. organized in Paris the first Cong. chh. in Camden. Four of the eight were Noah Tuttle, his wf. Thankful, their dau., Laura, and her husband, Philip Barnes. The town of Camden was organized a yr. afterwards (1799). Noah Tuttle was an honest man, in a much higher sense than is usually implied in that much used phrase. It was said of him, by one of those persons to be found in every community who judge professing christians by an ideal of christian life and character more nearly perfect than is often realized in this world of strife and competition, that "Uncle Noah Tuttle was the only christian in Camden." The following anecdote illustrates his idea of honesty, and shows that high as were his principles he lived up to them. A resident of Camden, noted for his sharp bargains and for his corresponding success in accumulating wealth, conversing one day with a neighbor, contended that all men were alike in this respect, and that every man would take as large a price as he could get. The neighbor replied that Noah Tuttle would not take, even if offered, more than his own estimate (always a moderate one) of the value of anything he had to sell. On this issue a bet was made between the two. It was known that Noah had a cow to sell at $20. In pursuance of a previously arranged plan he was called upon, and, after the usual beating about the bush, he was offered $22 for the cow. "I say for't," responded Uncle Noah, "that's two dollars more than she is worth." The skeptic lost his wager. He d. in Camden June 25, 1821, a. 77; m. June 6, 1771, Thankful Royce, b. He held the office of deacon in the Presbt. chh. of Camden for over 30 years; d. Oct. 25, 1865. "An obituary written by his pastor the Rev. W. S. Franklin, says: "The community has sustained a common loss in the death of Dea. Lyman Tuttle. He was a man of rare worth; one of those whose loss will be appreciated the more we realize that he is gone. Having been a resident of this town for sixty-eight years, he has seen the wilderness become a fruitful field; a thriving village taking the place of a dense forest. He has been especially identified with the religious history of the place. While a youth he made profession of his faith in Christ and for fifty years walked before this community as a man eminently worthy of his high and holy calling. Being united with the Cong. chh. he was one of its main supporting pillars and a faithful standard bearer for more than 30 years. His eulogy is written in a long life of earnest piety. Until a few days before his death he was active and energetic in his Master's business, we so little thinking that we should so soon bear him to the grave with universal lamentations. But such is the way of Him who has now removed from the church militant, one we could least afford to spare. He went down to his grave, gathered like a shock of corn fully ripe, in his season, leaving us to mourn his loss, while we temper our grief with the assurance that our loss is his eternal gain;" m. They rem. to Tivoli, Ill., Sept., 1848, thence to Munson in 1852; at that time the whole country between Cambridge and Geneseo, on Chicago & Rock Island R. He has filled various offices. "More than 60 years ago," he writes, "in my childhood I recollect seeing two of my grandfather's brothers in Camden, N. Y., on a visit to my grandfather Noah. I think their names were Ebenezer and Lucius." From an obituary, half a column long, published in the local paper we learn that Mr. Orris Tuttle d. on Monday night, Jan. 1, 1877, at the res. of his s. L. L. Tuttle in Orient township, Ill. "Father Tuttle was loved by all who knew him for his unvarying charity and kindness of spirit; his ever ready helping hand and his uniform observance of the golden rule. He was of strong mind and constitution, seldom sick and retained his faculties to the last. Just before the end he asked 'Mother Tuttle' if she thought he was dying. She replied: 'Father, I don't know.' He then remarked: 'It matters not; you will soon be with me again.'" "He died being old and full of days." After a funeral discourse by the Rev. J. B. Dunn his remains were followed by a large funeral procession to the Orient Cemetery.

9238. Timothy Tuttle, b. Cheshire, Conn., May 17, 1746; an ensign in Rev. army; rem. to Oneida Co., N. Y. "The settlement of the town of Kirkland commenced in March, 1787. Whether Timothy Tuttle or Ludim Blodgett (one of them certainly) were of the eight families who began the settlement is uncertain. In the following April both names appear on the records. Clinton village is in Kirkland; home lots on the north and south Main street, Clinton, were two acres each, and extended from the "Royce Mansion" to the dwelling of Mrs. Hays. Soon after eight acres adjoining were set apart for each; he built the first frame house in the town, 1789. * * * The town of Camden was organized, 1799 (a year after the organization of the chh. at Paris Hill, by Timothy's bro. Noah and others), and the first town meeting was held at the house of Samuel Royce, Esq., who was chosen town clerk; a beautiful cottage now occupies the spot where this first meeting was held. It is at the head of the main street. Mr. Royce exchanged places with Col. Timothy Tuttle and rem. to Tuttle's place in Clinton, and Col. Tuttle rem. to Royce's place in Camden and built a new house on it which is still standing." Jones' Hist. of Oneida Co., N. Y.

The first m. in the town of Sangerfield was that of Sylvanus Dyer and Hannah, dau. of Col. David Norton, Oct. 30, 1793, by Esq. (Timothy) Tuttle. It was his first performance, or as Miss Dyer says "the first knot of the kind the Squire ever tied. Every person in the town was invited to the wedding and not one failed to be present." —Ibid. The Tuttle fam. record states that Timothy was the first Col. of the first militia regiment raised in Oneida Co., but Mr. Jones in his history of the county, I think, names some one else. In answer to a letter of inquiry from the comp. on this point, Mr. Jones says: "A militia regiment was organized in Camden quite early and probably Timothy Tuttle was the first Col. One of Col. Timothy's was a Sergt. Major on the frontier in the war of 1812. Col. T. was one of the original trustees of the Clinton Academy." Afterwards merged in Hamilton College. He d. in Clinton village about 1820; m. Mehitable Royce, sis. of his bro. Noah Tuttle's wf. After his d. she lived with her dau. Mrs. Dunlap, at North East, Penn., where she d. Dec. 5, 1834.

I. Merab, drowned in Oriskany Creek in spring of 1788, a. 17 yrs. "The first death in Clinton village," says Mr. Jones. "If the settlement was contented and happy, they also came in for their share of afflictions allotted to humanity. In the spring of this year the insatiate archer sent a shaft into the scattered settlement, and he rarely assumes a more distressing or heart-rending form. The bow was not drawn at venture, for, as the poet writes, 'Death loves a shining mark.' Miss Merab Tuttle, dau. of Col. Timothy Tuttle, who owned and resided on the Royce farm, was drowned in the Oriskany Creek. The circumstances are briefly these: Miss Tuttle and Miss Annie, dau. of Capt. Moses Foot, started late in the afternoon to make a call at Mr. William Cook's, who resided on the west side of the creek in a log house. For lack of perfumed hair powder for their toilet, they called on the way at Cassety's mill, and with the mill dust whitened their locks as for some gala day—such was then the fashion. At that time from its source to its mouth no bridge spanned the stream, but a couple of trees had been felled a little below the site of the bridge on the road to the college. When the girls arrived at this crossing they found the stream swollen with the spring freshet, and the water was foaming madly along its channel. At first they quailed, but Miss Foot, the most courageous of the two, soon led the way, followed by her companion. When near the middle of the stream, Miss Foot heard her friend exclaim, 'O dear! my head swims,' which was instantly followed by a splash in the water, and turning saw her struggling in the stream. Miss Foot's cries were distinctly heard at Miss Tuttle's residence through the intervening wood. Mr. Cook was near at hand, and tried to rescue her. Her body was found next morning drawn under a pile of drift wood near the site of the Clinton factory.

"Few eyes in Clinton slept that night. The late Nehemiah Jones, knowing that there would be no clergyman found west of Albany, took a volume of sermons, in which there was one on the death of a young man who was drowned. After prayer by Capt. Ford, he read that sermon; text, I Samuel, xx:31, 'There is but a step between me and death.' Her grave was first dug on the green, but it being thought too wet, she was buried in the south part of the present burying ground, which was then a part of her father's farm. Major Barnabas Pond informed the author that he dug her grave, and every other subsequently until over one hundred."—Jones' Hist. of Oneida Co.

923835. Amos Tuttle, b. Feb. 13, 1806; d. suddenly of dropsy Jan. 17, 1873, in Roscoe, Ill. An obituary of a column in length in the local newspaper contains a sketch of his life and character. He was one of Winnebago County's oldest and most esteemed citizens. In the spring of 1807, traveling facilities being poor, he walked from Detroit, Mich., to Roscoe, Ill., which then contained but seven or eight families. His family followed the next year. He bought from the U. S. govt. all the land on the east side of Main st., where the village is now located, and gave away many lots to induce settlement. He was a builder and most of the old houses and many of the new show his handiwork. He helped to raise the first house built in Beloit, Wis., and built the third frame house in the city of Rockford, Ill. He built the public buildings in Roscoe including the churches and school houses and two of the churches in Rockton. He was honored and esteemed, faithful in all positions, honest in all business transactions. Over forty years ago he united with the Meth. Epis. chh. and gave all his energies to build up and establish it, and his name is held in grateful remembrance by his brethren as one whom God gave them as a needful helper in the great work, for without him it could not have been done. He was one of those worthy men to whom we owe a debt which can never be repaid, who, under difficulties and headstrong opposition and much privation when their numbers were few, planted here and there on these western wilds and broad unpeopled prairies the standard of the cross to greet the swelling tide of immigration. Too much, say those who know him best, cannot be said of this noble, christian man. As a christian undemonstrative but faithful and earnest, amiable in disposition and his life fragrant with the aroma of a noble christian character. He was one of the first board of trustees of the M. E. chh., which position he held over 20 yrs. Resolutions passed by the officers of the chh.: "That we recognize the fidelity and uprightness of the deceased, his kindness as a friend, his integrity as a citizen, his worth as a neighbor, his correct walk and hearty devotion as a christian as worthy of our praise and should excite our imitation." He m. 1833 Abi Ann Cole of N. E. Pa.; res. Roscoe, Ill.

An obit. pub. in the Lenoir Topie, of which the following is an outline and brief abstract, says: "Caldwell county how mourns the loss of one of her best and most popular citizens, Capt. Wm. A. Tuttle, who died at his residence on last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Funeral services were conducted at the Marion camp ground on Monday, at 10 o'clock, and the sermon preached by Rev. W. M. Hobey to probably the largest funeral congregation that ever assembled in this county. A large concourse of friends and relatives followed the remains to the grave-yard at Littlejohn's church. His death was caused by inflammation of the bowels, brought on by exposure to inclement weather. Than the deceased, there was no more gallant or braver soldier in the Southern army. He enlisted under Capt. Wm. Jones in the first company that went from Caldwell Co.—Pettigrew's Regt.—and served nobly and faithfully throughout the entire four years of the war. He was noted for conspicuous acts of gallantry on several occasions, and especially at Manassas, Chancellorsville and Gettysburgh. Shortly before he died, his cousin, Mr. D. Herndon Tuttle, said to him, 'You must get well, Cousin Willie, and meet your old comrades at the soldiers' reunion at Salisbury.' He replied, 'Yes, I will soon meet my old comrades, but it will be those who fell fighting by my side, and who have passed over and are happy on the other shore.' He was a devout member of the Methodist church. He will be sadly missed in this county, and the deepest sympathy is felt for his bereaved relatives. His wife and two beautiful daughters survive him." About 1874, contributed $25 to aid in gathering material for this work, and we believe he sent an equal amount elsewhere for the same purpose. He also gave the subject his personal attention and communicated much valuable information. My thanks were waived on the ground that he was doing no more than his share as a member of the family, for the common benefit. The following obituary is from the Hartford Courant: "When one has passed the limit of three-score years we do not commonly think of him as dying prematurely. But he whose name stands recorded here came of an ancestry remarkable for longevity, combined with mental and physical vigor; his own equable temperament and habits of life giving promise of a useful and vigorous old age. Born at Wolcott in 1807, he left his native town at an early age and engaged in active business pursuits, commanding wherever he went, the respect and affectionate regard of all who knew him. Those who sustained the most intimate relations with him knew him as a christian gentleman, undemonstrative and quiet, but possessing rare strength of affection and manifesting a tender and charitable appreciation of the trials and sorrows of everyone about him. His love for little children was a distinguishing trait of his character. Those who have felt the grasp of his hand, and heard his words of welcome that were the expression of a sincere heart, know that the large place he filled is left vacant for all time. To his brothers, sisters and step-son he was a wise and tender counsellor and beloved friend. To his wife and daughter his worth was beyond expression. It was fitting that such a life should close in perfect peace. After a few days of pain and weariness 'he was not, for God took him.'" m. April 7, 1835, Eveline Sophia Ives of Bristol, Conn., b. II. Charles Oct. 15, 1811; m. Sept. 11, 1838, Elmira Gilbert. The following obituary is from the Janesville Gazette:

"At his home in Clinton on the evening of Jan. 16, 1882, Charles Tuttle, aged 70. As one by one the early pioneers of the western country pass away, it is well for us to pause in our eager, onward strife to contemplate for a moment the benefits which we derive in a measure from the courage and self-sacrifice of these men. Charles Tuttle was one of five men who first located in what is now the town of Clinton. The death of Mr. Tuttle leaves but one of the original five, Daniel Mills, now living at Lodi, in this state. These five men had all been residents of the county of Jefferson, New York. In the spring of 1837, this little company made their way into the new territory of Wisconsin, seeking to locate farms. On the 7th of April 1837, they arrived at what is now Beloit, which then consisted of one log shanty. Following the Indian trail—which ran from this point to Milwaukee—they reached a spot near Turtle Creek, where there was a fine growth of young trees, and concluded here to locate. They built a log cabin 12 x 16, which they used jointly for a house, and gave to the place the name of Jefferson Prairie in honor of their old home. The location of this first house is near the now Clinton Corners. In the fall of 1838 Mr. Tuttle went back as far as Ohio, where he m. Elmira Gilbert, whose family had formerly res. in Jefferson Co., and returned with her to the little colony. He then built a log house about one mile north of the first location, and began housekeeping. The first town meeting was held in this cabin, and the town named Clinton, after Gov. DeWitt Clinton of New York, the name being suggested by a brother of Mrs. Tuttle. The first political meeting was held in this dooryard, a lumber wagon serving as a stand for the speaker. On the site of this cabin Charles Tuttle lived, honored and respected, for forty years.

"Mr. Tuttle was singularly modest and retiring in disposition, but was of sound judgment and sterling integrity. He was one of those rare lives that teach by the force of example." He lived what he believed; and now, after a residence of nearly forty-five yrs. in the same community, there is no one to say that Charles Tuttle was ever guilty of a dishonest or dishonorable action. He was one of the founders, and always one of the most earnest supporters of the Cong. chh. at Clinton. His intercourse with the church was of the same peaceful, harmonizing nature, and his religious feelings and aspirations are fitly set forth it the line, 'Nearer My God to Thee.' Throughout his life he gave liberally his time, his influence and his means in the support of any cause that would advance the interests of the community. Always kind and affectionate in his family, singularly affable and courteous in his intercourse with his neighbors, he was idolized by his family and loved by all who knew him. In his later years, with his white hair and beard, and benevolent countenance, he seemed like one of the Patriarchs of old; the kindly pressure of his hand was a blessing, his smile was a benediction. When his long and useful life came to a close, his death was in harmony with his life, as, surrounded by his loving family, he calmly and peacefully breathed his last. Well did the minister in his funeral discourse say, 'We have lost one of our best men, and if I say the best man, none will object,' and yet such a life is never lost. Its influence for good will continue to be felt long after the man is forgotten. He leaves besides the wife—who has been a beloved helpmeet to him through all the years of their sojourn together—three sons and one daughter, who are valuable members of society, and who do honor to such a parentage. The eldest son, Eugene, enlisted during the late war, and gave his life to his country."

92514. Gershom Tuttle, b. June 11, 1769; rem. from Bristol, Conn., to Paris, Oneida Co., N. Y., abt. 1790; thence abt. 1800 to Jefferson Co., N. Y., and opened a farm of 275 acres abt. five miles from the site of Watertown, in the town of Rutland, which was formed two years later (1802). He was one of the first commissioners of highways. In 1806, in company with Seth Bailey, he built the first grist mill in the town. From 1808 to 1816 he was commissioner for loaning moneys of the state (Hist. of Jeff. Co.). In 1810 his name appears as subscriber to the stock of the Black River Navigation Co.

He engaged in trading, manufacturing potash, etc. The highway leading past his house became a great thoroughfare between Northern New York, New England and the lake country, and the location being favorable he made large additions to his house and opened a tavern. In the rear of his house a magnificent spring bubbled seemingly out of the solid rock. The forest supplied venison, the streams supplied speckled trout. He was a man of excellent character, genial temper, very fond of a joke, a capital story teller and imitator of men and manners, and a good story and good cheer were always ready. The tavern became famous. When the war of 1812 was imminent the stream of business and travel along the road towards Sackett's Harbor became enormous; army supplies, artillery, baggage wagons, troops, soldiers and sailors every evening, "and a harem-scarem set of fellows they were." One day a party of mounted officers drew up in front of the tavern and ordered their horses fed and dinner for themselves. In this party was a young Lieut. who put on a great many airs—finding fault with the horse feed, and with this, that and the other thing about the house, to the great annoyance of the landlord, who, losing his patience at last, informed the fastidious young gentleman that if the house didn't suit, he had better try somewhere else. "All right," was the reply, "but before I leave I will go and kiss the landlady," and suiting the action to the word, repaired promptly to the kitchen (the Col. in close pursuit), and embracing the astonished "lady of the house," gave her a ringing salute; but before the enraged host could reach him to effect summary chastisement, he heard the Lieut. exclaim, "My dear aunt, don't you know me? I am your brother's son, Newman Clark, your nephew." This little surprise afforded much merriment, and was kept longer in remembrance than many affairs of much graver import. Lieut. Clark was in many hard fought battles of the war; was severely wounded at Niagara; served with distinction in the Florida Indian wars, and in the war with Mexico; was promoted to Brig. Gen. in the regular army for gallantry in the field. He d. in San Francisco about 1858, while in command of the Department of the Pacific.

During the war of 1812 Col. Tuttle was in command of a militia regiment, and was suddenly ordered to the defense of Sackett's Harbor, in which action he took part. (See Gen. Brown's Report).

Col. Tuttle was to his dying day exceedingly sensitive on the subject of this affair. Being an earnest and active politician of the Democratic order, the Federalists made use of it to annoy him. Circumstances growing out of this matter also caused an estrangement between Gen. Brown and himself, who had been warm personal friends. In 1816 he removed with all his family but his son Dennis, to Vigo Co., Ind., on Otter Creek, about six miles from Terre Haute, where he d. Sept. 5, 1823, a. 54. and was bu. with Masonic honors. Some years afterward Gen. Brown, being in Watertown and suffering from partial paralysis, called Dennis Tuttle to his side, took his hand, and with deep feeling paid a glowing tribute to the character of Col. Gershom Tuttle. He m. in Farmington, Conn., July 8, 1788, Pamela Strong Clark of F., b. Nov. 4, 1770. Her brother was an officer of the U. S. A., and d. while in charge of the U. S. arsenal in Troy, N. Y. Gen. Newman Strong Clark of the Dept. of the Pacific, was her nephew. She d. at Nashville, Ind., April 15, 1851, a. 81.

*Noah Wadhams went from Middletown, Conn., to Goshen in 1741, and d. there over 80 yrs. of age. That he was an honorable and high-minded man is shown in the affair of the negro Joseph De Mink, a native of Bravo, one of the Cape Verd Islands, who, being in Buena Vista March, 1755, and desiring to return home embarked with Capt. Phineas Cook of Wall'd, who promised to take him to Bravo, but instead brought him to Wall'd and delivered him to Daniel Cook, his father, who sold him as a slave to Noah Wadhams of Goshen for £52 and 10s. Wadhams becoming convinced that Joseph was a freeman, compromised with Cook and returned Joseph, but fearing that Cook might again dispose of Joseph, procured the interposition of the General Assembly, who fined Capt. Cook, appointed Thos. Seymour guard, to Joseph and had him conveyed home free of cost. — Davis' Hist. of Wall'd.

Tuttle, chaplain in the United States army, died on Saturday at his late home, in 105th street, near the Western Boulevard. He had been failing for half a year, and a few weeks ago he went South, hoping there to renew his health. He returned to New York a week ago in such a condition that he had to be carried into his house from the carriage. Mr. Tuttle was 66 years old and was born in Auburn, N. Y. For many years he was pastor of a church in Chicago and during the years 1861 and 1862 he had charge of Camp Douglass, near Chicago, where between 7,000 and 10,000 Confederate prisoners were held. In 1862 he was made chaplain of an Illinois regiment in the Army of the Potomac in Virginia. He went West after the war and was stationed at various frontier posts as chaplain. He afterward wrote for young readers an interesting narrative of his experiences among the Indians. He had been absent from the army under leave of absence during the past ten years, partly on account of ill health. He made several trips to Europe during that period. Mr. Tuttle wrote frequently for the religious papers and published several books. He also devoted much time to works of benevolence, and in this direction was enabled to accomplish much through the means of several gentlemen of wealth who contributed money for his philanthropic projects. The funeral services yesterday afternoon were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Peters, and there were present Dr. Rylance of St. Mark's church, Gen. Wilson and Dr. Hayden. Mrs. Tuttle went last night to Chicago with her husband's remains, which will be buried there." He m.

926215. Henry Blakeslee Tuttle, b. at Sandgate, Vt., Sept. 16, 1817; rem. with parents to Cambridge; thence abt. 1835 to Lansingburg. In 1841 rem. with mother, wife and one son to Cuyahoga Falls, O.; in spring of 1842 bought and rem. to a farm in Pittsfield, Lorraine Co., O., which he occupied two years, then returned to C. Falls; rem. finally to Cleveland, O., Jan. 1, 1851, where he carried on an extensive business as an iron merch., and d. there April 9, 1878; about 1872 contributed ten dollars towards paying the expenses of compiling this work. The following is from a prominent Cleveland, O., paper:

"A few minutes before 1 o'clock yesterday, Mr. H. B. Tuttle, a well-known iron dealer and for many years an honored resident of this city, died very suddenly at Whitney's dining rooms on Superior street. Mr. Tuttle had entered the place a few moments before apparently in the best of health, nodding in a friendly way to several acquaintances who sat at one of the tables, at the same time divesting himself of his overcoat and hat, which he handed to one of the waiters. He next sat down in a chair and had scarcely time to pick up a bill of fare when those about him saw a sudden jerk of his frame; his hands dropped to his side, his head fell back and nothing was heard but a slight gurgle in the throat. Several gentlemen rushed to his side and lifted his body to a sofa that was near by. Medical aid was summoned, but upon an examination he was found to be dead, having probably expired immediately upon sitting down on his chair. His son and a number of acquaintances soon arrived and took the body in charge, conveying it to his late residence, No. 1364 Euclid avenue.

"The news of the sudden death of a man who had occupied so high and honorable a place in the respect of the people spread rapidly, and a feeling that another of the men who could least be spared had been taken was universal. A great many called at the office of Messrs. H. B. Tuttle & Co. during the afternoon to verify the report they had heard, while a large number of near friends visited the stricken family at their home to offer such words of sympathy as were possible in a time like that.

"Mr. Tuttle had not been feeling well during the greater part of the winter and had talked of going away for the benefit of his health, but for a little time past had been more like himself. He left home yesterday morning at the usual time and at noon left his desk feeling as usual and complaining of no feeling of pain or distress. He probably felt no pain when the fatal moment arrived, but passed out of life into immortality as quietly as a child falls asleep.

"Subsequent examination caused the physicians to pronounce heart disease as the cause of his death. Mr. Tuttle was a man who would be missed from any community, having won and held a reputation for honesty, industry and benevolence second to that possessed by no man in the community. He was born in Sandgate, Vt., on Sept. 16, 1817, and consequently was 60 years of age last fall. He engaged in business at an early date, and in 1851 commenced in Cleveland, being engaged, in company with Mr. Isaac L. Hewitt, in the commission business on the river, where he remained for several years. He left that business and was made Secretary of what is now the Cleveland

Iron Mining Co. At this time the business of the Lake Superior ore trade was in its infancy and Mr. Tuttle, as much as any man in the city or elsewhere, was the means by which that business was opened and built up. Under the direction of this company he went to Marquette and superintended the building of the first dock ever built there. He then became the agent of the Lake Superior Iron Co. and on the organization of the Champion Iron Co. became its agent, and at the present time the firm of which he was the head, were holding the same business relations with the companies named. In this business Mr. Tuttle accumulated a handsome property, which he knew how to use in a most fitting way, and for the good of others as well as for himself or his own.

"As a christian man whose benevolence was unostentatious but always ready, Mr. Tuttle was always known and will be so remembered. For years he was a conscientious member of the Stone Church, and no man, after the 27 years of daily business he did in Cleveland, can say but that he lived up to this profession, nor call him a hypocrite. He was a modest man and above all things disliked notoriety. He was a director in several benevolent as well as business associations, and all will feel the loss of his wise and excellent counsels.

"Mr. Tuttle leaves a wife and four sons, three of whom, Messrs. George R., Frederick L. and Horace A., are residents of Cleveland, where they are engaged in business, while the fourth, Albert H., is Prof. of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy of the Ohio Agricultural and Mechanical Col. at Columbus. To all these mourning friends the sympathy not only of a large circle in Cleveland will be extended, but that of the general public, to whom Mr. Tuttle was only known as a man foremost in every good work and whose word was held as sacred as his written bond."

926.10.5. Laura Hannah Cook, b. Jan. 4, 1787; m. at Nassau, N. Y., June 1, 1816, Samuel McClellan,* M. D., b. June 14, 1787. "This connection proved a very happy one for themselves, for their children, for their friends; home under their roof was a home for all with a hearty welcome for each, and no one who has enjoyed it can ever forget the amenities which uniformly clustered there." The following is a brief abstract from "Eulogy on Samuel McClellan, M. D., prepared by order of the Medical Society of the State of N. Y. and read at the annual meeting in Albany, Feb. 3, 1857, by Thomas W. Blatchford, M. D.," printed by C. Van Benthuysen, Albany. We regret that our limited space will not admit the entire paper. In early life Dr. McClellan attended the common schools and the Academy at Deerfield; taught school and worked on his father's farm; then stud. med. with an elder brother, Dr. John McClellan of Livingston, N. Y., and was licensed to practice by the Columbia Co. Med. Soc. About 1813 he settled at Schodack, N. Y., and very soon after a malignant fever (typhoid pneumonia) prevailed extensively in that part of the county as an epidemic. His success in treating this disease was extraordinary, and established his reputation as a skillful physician, which he ever afterwards maintained.

He was remarkably popular as a medical instructor and his office was usually full of students, several of whom have risen to eminence and not one has failed to become a successful practitioner. He was a skillful surgeon, but after reaching the age of fifty years declined all surgical operations. He was twice elected Pres. of the Rensselaer Co. Med. Soc. Soon after his m. he united with the Presb. chl. at Nassau and served long as a ruling elder until the "new school" division compelled him to leave, about 1842, when he obtained letters and united with the Dutch Reformed chl. of the same place. He was soon elected a ruling elder and held the office until his death. He was a warm advocate of the temperance cause. He was a noble looking man, much above the ordinary height, and when in health his weight varied from 225 to 240 lbs. He d. of an internal cancer, April 8, 1855.

92923. Clarissa Tuttle, b. Dec. 31, 1779; m. Titus Smith, b. Sept. 27, 1779, and both d. on the same day, Feb. 16, 1862. In Sept., 1797, Rufus Lines and Titus Smith left Cheshire, Conn., and arrived at Lawsville* on the 21th of the same month, the 18th birthday of Smith. The object was to explore and select land, all returning to Conn. for the ensuing winter. In Feb., 1798, Titus Smith was again on the ground accompanied by his brother Ephraim (who m. Sally Tuttle, sis. of Clarissa). They brought a sled, provisions and a few utensils. The sled, covered with boughs, served as a shelter for a long time. The lot he had partially cleared the previous fall he sold to David Barnum and commenced anew on the farm he cultivated and lived on till old age. He was one of the elders of the Presb. chh., chosen in 1836, and had previously been a deacon, which office he held about fifty years. He was one of the seven brothers† who settled in Franklin, all of whom lived beyond the age of 80 yrs. excepting Anson, who was mortally hurt by a falling limb of a tree he was chopping. This was in 1805. He was 22 years of age and unm. His d. made it necessary to select ground for a cemetery, and his burial was the first one in the township. The ground selected was a part of each of the adjoining farms of Rufus Lines and Ephraim Smith. In that sacred enclosure nearly all the first settlers of the place now rest. Rufus Lines rem. finally to L. about 1801.—Blackman's Hist. Susq. Co.

In 1851 rem. to Wis. and settled in Green Lake Co., where *Lawsville received its name in honor of Samuel A. Law of Cheshire, Conn., to whose influence probably was due the settlement there of so many emigrants from his native town. The route from Cheshire was across the country to the Hudson River, crossing to Catskill, thence to the head of the Delaware river near Harpersville, N. Y., thence to the Susquehanna Valley at Wattle's Ferry, at the north end of Unadilla Village; thence down the Susquehanna to Great Bend, the whole distance about 250 miles, much of it west of the Hudson a wilderness. From Great Bend to Lawsville the way was found by marked trees and the compass; camping on arrival until cabins could be erected. The first clearing at L. was made in the spring of 1797 by James Clark.—Ibid.

†The seven brothers above referred to were sons of Ephraim, and supposed grandsons of Ephraim and Thankful Tyler Smith of Cheshire, Conn. Thankful Tyler was dau. of Nathan and Rachel (Tuttle) Tyler, and gr. dau. of Dea. Timothy Tuttle (22); births and baptisms copied from Cheshire chh. rec.

Co., Pa., where he helped to form the church, and was its clerk for many years and until his death, Dec. 19, 1820. An obituary in the local paper speaks of him in the highest terms as an active and useful citizen and a devoted christian. The whole community mourned his loss. "He was eminently a peace maker." He m. May 21, 1804, Eunice, dau. of Rufus and Tamar Lines, b. in Cheshire, Conn., Nov. 5, 1784; this was the first marriage in Lawsville. She d. in Franklin, Aug. 13, 1869, in her 85th yr.; nearly the last survivor of the first settlers of Lawsville. She was left a widow with eight children to provide and care for, and as an instance of the toils and privations of pioneer life in the wilderness it is related that once, in company with Mrs. Merriman, she went twenty miles to procure as many potatoes as she could carry on the back of her horse. She lived to see her children all settled in life and the heads of families. She was a woman of peculiar energy, a devoted christian, and the memory of her life of unwearyed and victorious conflict, with many trials and difficulties, and of her many virtues, is a precious legacy to her descendants.

V. Lucius Vincent, b. Prospect, Conn., April 18, 1838. In reading a book of biographies of self-made men he determined to add to the number. By severe manual labor he obtained means to buy a few books, which he often sat up whole nights to read. By rigorous self-denial, even of the comforts of life, he saved some money for the purpose of educating himself, which was lost by being placed in the hands of a friend who failed. Then his good sister, Mary J., came to his rescue, advancing all the money she had and privately borrowing more. So helped, he entered Claverack Acad. and a few years later at Wilbraham, Mass.; studied and at the same time taught; here his personal effects were destroyed by fire and again his devoted sister sent him all she could spare; from Wilbraham to Oberlin, O., where the call for 75,000 men reached him and he enlisted in Co. C, 7th O. Vols.; a company made up of students and teachers. For some time he served as private Sec. for Gen. Tyler of O. In one of the early engagements, taken prisoner or cut off from the army, wandering in the woods for days without food, betrayed where he sought shelter, taken to Richmond and at Libby prison three months and while stricken with typhoid had naught but a log for a pillow; thence to Tuscaloosa; thence to Salisbury, No. Car. (in all about a year,) where, 15 feet under ground, he battled with death and won, though he came out physically a wreck, weighing just 75 pounds; reduced from 150. Even in this black hole he pursued his object with steady purpose and strong persistence, studied German and geometry and parsed Milton's Paradise Lost. Are martyrs made of sterner stuff than this? Afterwards exchanged and rallying somewhat in health he traveled over several states lecturing on his prison experience and making money for the Sanitary Commission; then a term of study at the Lebanon, O., Normal School; afterwards teaching there Latin and Greek, as head of the classical department about 5 years, during which (1868) he married into one of the "first families" of the true blood of Quakerdom, Etta B. Wood, (dau. of Daniel, a Quaker preacher of Woodbury, Morrow Co., O.); then went to Berlin and stud. German. From 1871 to 1873, inclusive, at Wesleyan Col., Delaware, O., Principal of Preparatory Dept. and Adjunct Prof. of Ancient Languages. He went twice more to Europe for study and travel, and at the time of his death was making preparations for a journey round the world, of which he intended to publish an account in a book of travels. In 1879 he was appointed Principal of the "Friend's Academy," in Baltimore, Md., 193 No. Eutaw st.; he worked too hard under too much tension, his vital powers ran low, and his friends seeing the danger urged him to drop the burden for awhile and give tired nature a chance to recuperate. His answer was: "I cannot neglect my duty." Then when the holidays came he went to Ocean Grove, on the New Jersey shore, but did not rally and in about two weeks was prostrated and died three days afterwards, June 27, 1881. As his friends gathered around his bed, talked to him of the Saviour and sung "Hope of Earth; Joy of Heaven" his eyes spoke in a flood of tears what his voice could not utter, and with hand uplifted in testimony of that Divine presence he passed into the shadow. He was of a fine and delicate organization, sensitive and shrinking, self-contained, modest, earnest and sincere.—Abridged from J. H., in Baltimore Methodist of July 21, 1881. His widow is preparing a memoir for publication; 1 child, MARY ELIZABETH, d. a. about 3 yrs.

9298. Thaddeus Tuttle, b. Aug. 18, 1757, (Capt. of Militia); m. June 22, 1794, Amelia, eld. dau. of Ambrose and Sarah (Tryon) Atwater, b. July 3, 1767; he was of Wall'd, Conn., 1783, but prob. soon rem. to Vermont where he bought, in company with Guy Catlin [p. 96] the townships of Westford and Essex (timber lands) in Chittenden Co. He also purchased various parcels of land in different parts of Burlington and owned about 100 acres in the heart of the town. By cutting and forwarding timber to Quebec and by his land speculations, he became quite wealthy. He built a large and elegant brick house in Burlington, finished in the costliest manner and furnished with every convenience, "an example," says his daughter, Mrs. Dewing, "of his thorough manner of doing some things." It stands in a plot of about forty acres, the finest site in the town, a commanding situation overlooking Lake Champlain and the magnificent and beautiful scenery for which the place is famed. After three-fourths of a century, since it was built, the Tuttle house still has no superior in Burlington. It subsequently passed successively into the hands of several celebrities. Gov. Van Ness owned and occupied it and entertained LaFayette there; afterwards Heman Allen, bro. of Ethan, owned and occupied it. Capt. Thaddeus Tuttle was a fast and free liver, generous to a fault. There was no limit to his hospitality, his house and table free to all and always filled. "His family allowed to do pretty much as they chose." He was very impulsive and passionate, but quickly over it and incapable of harboring malice. Having quarreled with his partner, Catlin, about the division of some land, they litigated the matter for sixteen years, when it was at last decided in Capt. Tuttle's favor, but in the meantime the lawyers had eaten up his substance, squatters and others had stolen the lumber and a fortune had been spent. His convivial habits also helped him on his road to poverty. He was not educated in business habits; was careless; took no receipts, and when he died and his estate was settled there was nothing left that his children could legally claim.

Many anecdotes are told of him. To some British officers stopping at his house he was fond of extolling Yankee bravery. This at last gave offence and led to a challenge from one of them. Seconds were chosen, ground selected and everything progressed in due order up to the moment when the signal was given to fire, upon which Capt. Tuttle wheeled, without firing, and marched in the direction away from his opponent. On being expostulated with he treated the matter as a joke and the two shook hands and were ever after friends. A fine street in Burlington was called for him "Tuttle st."

.11. Mercy Tuttle, b. April 27, bap. May 19, 1650; m. May 2, 1667, Samuel, s. of Francis* and Mary (Edwards) Brown, bap. April 9, 1645; (Mercy's bro., Joseph Tuttle, m. same day to Hannah Munson.) He was an original subscriber to the compact for the settlement of Wallingford and had a lot assigned to him, but not building on it within the prescribed time lost his title. The lot was afterwards assigned to John Moss, in whose family it remained until within a few years. In 1850 Moses Y. Beach of the N. Y. Sun bought the property and erected an elegant mansion now known as the Beach House; John Moss, John Brockett and Samuel Brown were friends and were assigned adjoining lots.—Davis' Hist. of Wall'd. He d. in Wall'd Nov. 6, 1691, a. 45; Mercy was living as late as 1695, in New Haven, perhaps with Thomas Trowbridge.

* Francis Brown was one of the prospecting company who came with Gov. Eaton to Quinnipiac in advance of the colony and was left with six others to spend the winter of 1637-8 in a hut erected near what is now the corner of Church and George sts., in New Haven, Conn. The names of five, as given by Lambert, were Joshua Atwater, Francis Brown, John Beecher, Robert Pigg and Thomas Hogg.—Lambert; Cop. fm. Trumbull. Winthrop notices the uncommon severity of that winter and says the snow lay deep from the 4th of Nov. to the 23d of March. One of the men (supposed John Beecher) died before spring and was buried. In 1750, in excavating the cellar for the stone house still standing at the intersection of George and Meadow sts., the bones of a large man were found, supposed to be those of the man who died as above, being buried in the English instead of the Indian (sitting) position. Francis Brown kept the ferry at Red Rock till 1650, when George Pardee took it and the ferry farm, granted to Pardee, continues in his family. He m. in Eng., Mary Edwards, and d. in E. Hav. 1668.—Dodd.

Mr. Andrews' chh., and a strong loyalist. He was one of the four largest contributors to the erection of the second chh. edifice in 1762. Mr. Andrews was compelled to leave for Nova Scotia on account of a Fast Day sermon. At the funeral of Mr. Brockett the Whigs would not allow his body to be buried with the other dec. members of his family, but compelled Turhand Kirtland and two others to have the grave dug in a wet, springy ground, where it immediately filled with water, though in midsummer, and rails were used to keep the coffin down. The rails protruded from the ground and were pointed at by the loyalist as a monument to the fanaticism of their persecutors.—Davis' Hist. of Wall'd; m. Feb. 22, 1728, Mary Turhand, who d. He, with most of his company, was attacked with malignant camp distemper and was discharged at Sawpits; returned home and carried on farming and carriage making several years. He was one of the original members of the Conn. Land Co. which purchased the title to the New Conn. (Western Reserve). In 1798 as agent of the Co. he conducted a boat laden with surveyors, emigrants and provisions up the Mohawk river, through Wood Creek, Oneida and Ontario Lakes into Niagara river, thence hauled it around the falls on the Canada side and navigated up the river and through Lake Erie into Grand river, a little above the present city of Painesville. He annually visited the East until 1803, when he removed his fam. to Ohio and located at Poland, where he res. until his d. Aug. 16, 1844. As agent or proprietor he disposed of extensive tracts of new land; was active and influential in promoting new settlements, introducing schools and various improvements. I. Jared Potter, Nov. 10, 1793; Y. C. 1815; LL. D., Williams Col. 1861; studied in Cheshire and Wallingford Academies. In 1810 began study of medicine as a private pupil of Dr. Eli Ives and Dr. Nathaniel Smith of New Haven, until 1812, then entered the first class of the Medical Department of Y. C. and was the first who signed the matriculation book in the charge of Prof. Jonathan Knight. At the close of the medical term he, with others, formed a class for the study of botany and mineralogy (in connection with their medical studies) under Prof. Eli Ives and Benjamin Silliman. In 1814 entered the Med. Dept. of the Univ. of Pa. and soon after passed examination for a med. degree before the med. fac. of Y. C. Thesis, "Our Indigenous Vegetable Materia Medica." From 1814 to 1817 prac. med. in Wall'd. In the latter year, at a town meeting in Durham he was invited to locate in that town as a phys., which he accepted. His prac. soon became large but he found time to cultivate fruits and flowers, in which he was exceedingly interested. In 1823 he removed to Poland, O., where he gave his time and attention mainly to farm, garden and orchard culture, and occasionally to medicine when called upon. In 1837 he rem. to Cleveland, O., but soon tired of narrow limits, bought one hundred and seventy five acres about five miles west of the city, immediately on the lake shore. Here he examined and described all the fishes of the Ohio lakes and rivers, collected and compared innumerable fresh water shells, in connection with which he made the discovery of the sexual or male and female character of the muscle, which is indicated by the form of the shell. He examined the native wild plants, botanically, also examined and studied the geological formation of the state. He has also gathered specimens of birds by the hundreds, investigated the habits of the honey-bee; all this while superintending a large farm on which all the best grains and grapes, best breeds of cattle, sheep and hogs have been raised, tried and compared, and the comparative value of manures tested and their components analyzed. His discoveries in conchology and ichthyology attracted universal attention. In 1848 he was given charge of the natural history department of the survey of the state of Ohio, and his works on that subject were published in Boston and elsewhere.

In 1827 he was elected to the Ohio Legislature, and several times re-elected; was chairman of the committee on the Penitentiary. In 1835 elected Prof. of the Theory and Practice of medicine in the Med. Col. of Ohio. In 1841 resigned and accepted a similar position in the Willoughby Med. School, and afterward when the med. dept. of the Western Reserve Col. at Cleveland was established, he accepted a similar position in that college, which he resigned on account of ill health in 1864. He was Pres. of the Ohio State Med. Soc. at one time, and when attending public gatherings has universally been called upon to preside. Important honorary degrees were bestowed on him by various eastern and western colleges, and honors by several societies for valuable scientific services. He was a corresponding mem. of the New Eng. Genealogical Soc., and sent many years ago an account of the Kirtland, Forbes, Potter and Brockett families of Wallingford, pub. in the Register. "As we go to press this morning (May 29, 1883, at Manheim, Herkimer Co., N. Y.) announcement is made of the death, last evening, of one whose name is a synonym for all charity and brotherly love, for kindness of heart, gentleness of disposition, and uprightness in life. We have no opportunity to speak of him now as his virtues would seem to demand, but shall seek material for a more fitting obituary hereafter. Zenas Brockett, of all men whom we have ever known, came the nearest to a life in strict accord with the golden rule of love towards his neighbor. His heart was warm and loving towards all men, and in return all men loved him. His life was made up of kind deeds and noble examples. He ever acted up to his convictions, and his convictions were ever upon the side of right and justice and humanity. These are strong words but they will be recognized as just and true words by all who ever came to know him intimately. His biography deserves to be read by the young men who follow him, as an example well worthy of their imitation. His death, long expected though it has been, will bring sorrow to many a heart outside the family or the social circle in which he moved."—Little Falls Journal and Courier, N. Y.

11.4346. Roswell Trowbridge, b. April 29, 1785; d. Jan. 4, 1844; m. Jan. 6, 1813, Nancy, dau. of Ezekiel Hayes [p. 291], who d. Aug. 30, 1857, res. on Meadowst., N. Hav. He was a mariner. In the war of 1812, when four days out from New Hav. to St. Bartholomew's, W. I., then a neutral port, his vessel loaded with a general assortment of American produce and a deck load of oxen and sheep was captured by a British frigate, on board of which was the Admiral of the fleet. Capt. Trowbridge was ordered on board the frigate with his papers. On learning his name the Admiral claimed that he was a British subject, but being assured by Capt. T. that he was born in America, was released. The name of Trowbridge being that of an Admiral under whom his captor had formerly served, propitiated the latter to that extent that Capt. T. was treated very kindly, his vessel and cargo restored, some of the produce and stock which had been transferred to the Admiral's ship liberally paid for and on taking final leave the Admiral sent a boat load of delicacies and valuables as a token of good will. Capt. T. then returned to N. Hav., having been absent eight days.

He was a universal favorite with his acquaintances at home or abroad. During his long sea-going experience many interesting incidents occurred. At one time, on the night of his arrival with a valuable cargo at the Island of Guadaloupe, a violent hurricane arose which destroyed a large portion of the town and drove every vessel to sea or on to the shore, causing a great loss of life among seamen. Capt. T. anticipated the gale, put to sea, but soon his vessel was capsized and so remained a long time, but finally righted with loss of masts and most of her rigging and spars. After the gale abated Capt. T. discovered he was near the Island of St. Domingo, which he soon reached. Here he remained for months unable to communicate with his friends. Nearly all of his crew who had escaped death by the gale died of yellow fever, but Capt. T., by skill and perseverance, made new masts and so fitted up his vessel as to enable him to return to New Haven, where he arrived after an absence of six months greatly to the surprise and joy of his friends and family, who believed him lost in the hurricane.

.11.4379. Henry Trowbridge, b. July 30, 1781; d. Oct. 7, 1849, a. 68. At abt. the age of eighteen he took the usual juvenile sea fever; desired to see foreign countries. to become a seaman and command a vessel. Just then the ship "Betsey," Capt. Howell, was fitting out for a sealing voyage to the Pacific, and Henry, with his father's consent, obtained a situation on board. Henry was entrusted by his father with one thousand dollars to invest in China, where the vessel was eventually to proceed. This fact shows the great confidence the father had in the son. The ship sailed in Sept., 1799, and the Capt. immediately began with the boys a course of instruction in seamanship. Henry was acquainted with arithmetic, and by the time Cape Horn was reached, could work his lunar observation as well as the Capt. The customary grog ration was never used by Henry, but was given by him to the old sailors in return for instruction in sailors' work of splicing, knotting, reefing, etc., and thus he soon became proficient in all operations on board, and could take his regular trick at the wheel.

At the Island of Massafuero, where the sealing was done, there was no anchorage, and the vessel lay off and on while the boat made trips to the shore. On one of these trips the boat, manned by 4 boys, including Henry, was capsized, and he alone was saved by swimming nearly two miles to the island. After several months nearly one hundred and ten thousand fur seal skins had been put on board, and the ship sailed for Canton, where they were to be sold; stopping on the way for supplies at one of the Sandwich Islands, where about twenty years before Capt. Cook had been murdered by the natives. The ship stood off and on for several days, fearing to anchor, but finally the king came on board, squatted on the deck, took his sea biscuit and cup of molasses, gave the needed provisions for such articles as he wanted, and the ship proceeded on her voyage. Before reaching Canton, Henry, for his good conduct, sobriety and intelligence, was made Captain's clerk to assist in accounting and book-keeping, a position which he eagerly accepted as it afforded great advantages for investing his father's money. Masters of vessels were also supercargos, and to facilitate the disposal of the outward and the buying of the home cargo, it was customary to hire a factory in Canton. Henry was installed as clerk of the factory. This was the beginning of the extensive house of H. Trowbridge & Sons.

During the stay in Canton he gave way to curiosity to get inside the city walls where foreigners were not then allowed. Filling his pockets with the small currency of the country, he placed himself at the gate in company with a young man belonging to another factory; when the gate was opened they rushed in and up the principle street. A great outcry followed; crowds of Chinese blocked the way, front and rear, and the case seemed desperate. A way, however, was opened by throwing handfuls of coin, and taking advantage of the scramble that ensued to gradually effect their exit. On returning to the ship he was ordered by the mate to resume his place before the mast.

He stowed away his venture in his berth in the fore-castle, and slept on top of his chest for the remainder of the voyage. That chest is now preserved as an heirloom in the family. On the passage home the ship struck a rock in the Malacca straits and was obliged to remain for repairs, giving opportunity for excursions to Malacca for water, which was obtained after many hair-breadth escapes from the natives. The "Betsey" arrived at New York, having made an excellent voyage, and Henry's venture of one thousand dollars was doubled.

He next made several voyages as first officer of a West Indiaman, and in three yrs. accumulated sufficient to purchase a small sloop in Conn. river, which, with the assistance of Mr. Morris, he fitted up as a schooner and loaded with merchandise for Barbadoes, with forty oxen on deck. Just before the vessel was ready for sea he was taken sick, but to escape the threatened ruin, caused himself to be carried on board on a mattress, and the vessel sailed. At Barbadoes he heard of Miranda's expedition fitting out at Trinidad for the Spanish main, and judging rightly that his cattle would be wanted, sailed at once. He arrived at Trinidad in the nick of time, sold his cattle and cargo for a round sum, and loaded a return cargo of sugar and molasses, arriving safely at home with more Spanish dollars than his outward cargo cost. He thence established himself in the West India Trade, which gradually increased and became in his lifetime the largest house in that business in the United States. For nearly three-quarters of a century it has maintained this position, under the name of H. Trowbridge, H. Trowbridge & Sons, H. Trowbridge Sons & Dwight, and H. Trowbridge & Sons, and after his death the business was and is still continued by his sons under the name of H. Trowbridge Sons.

The New Haven Palladium, in an obituary, speaks of him as a prudent and sagacious merchant, who by means of his talents and his wealth exercised a great influence in New Haven. He was rather strong in his prejudices, and unmovable where he believed himself in the right, and therefore was strongly opposed by a portion of his fellow citizens. But no one ever doubted the honesty of his intentions or the integrity of his character.

The New York Independent says: "He was widely known as the senior partner of the first commercial house in his native city. For many years past his firm, H. Trowbridge & Sons, have been frequently spoken of as the head of the West India business in the United States. Two hundred years ago when the settlers of New Haven began to establish commercial relations with the West India Islands, his first American ancestor was engaged in the same business. From his early youth Mr. Trowbridge was closely attached to the church in which his ancestors worshipped, and in which he himself had been presented to God in baptism by parental piety. Forty years ago, when he had never made any religious profession, his house was in affliction. His wife was on the bed of affliction and his first born and only child was near to death. He sent for his pastor (the now venerable Professor Stuart) and requested that the child might be baptized. The request was declined. 'You,' said the pastor to the parents, 'make no profession, and exhibit no evidence of having given yourselves to God; what will it be then more than a solemn and empty form for you to offer your child in baptism?' Some parents in such circumstances would immediately have gone to some other church, but these parents took a different course. On that day they resolved, and pledged themselves to each other that they would seek the Kingdom of God. On that day the father for the first time by the mother's bedside, lifted up his voice in prayer, and from that day to the day of his death, prayer was habitually offered in their dwelling. Though for more than thirty years afterwards he felt that his religious character was not sufficiently clear to justify him in making a religious profession his family was thenceforward a religious family, and few families have been happier, or have shared more largely in the blessings of the covenant. The sagacity and energy of Mr. T. as a man of business, and the success of all his undertakings were proverbial. It was remarked that his ships always made prosperous voyages, and that seeming reverses generally turned in his favor. In his family, too, he seemed to be exempt from those calamities which come to all. But during the last season he has been made acquainted with affliction.

"His only brother, who had been for thirty years his next door neighbor, died at a moment's notice. Three of his grandchildren were taken away, two of them in circumstances peculiarly afflicting. At last sickness came nearer still; his wife and his youngest daughter were brought simultaneously to the brink of death. They were spared, but before they had begun to recover, the fatal disease had fastened upon him. Doubtless these successive strokes of affliction were necessary to prepare him for the closing scene. Having arranged all his secular affairs at the commencement of his sickness, he dismissed the world entirely from his thoughts and waited for the will of God. When it appeared at last that he must die he gave his parting farewells and counsels to his children and grandchildren, and then calmly, cheerfully and with an humble reliance on the Saviour, yielded himself to death."

For many years he had been a regular contributor to many of our religious charities. In his last will he bequeathed to the American Board of Foreign Missions $5,000; to the American Home Missionary Society, $5,000; to the Bible Society, $2,000; to the Seaman's Friend Society, $2,000; to the First church in New Haven, for the use of the poor, $2,000, with other charitable bequests, amounting in all to more than $20,000. 11.43793. Thomas Rutherford Trowbridge, b. July 17, 1810; is the oldest member of the firm of Henry Trowbridge's Sons, who are more extensively engaged in the West India Shipping business than any other house in the state. The business has been prosecuted by members of the family for several successive generations, who have thereby acquired wealth and extensive influence among their fellow citizens. The various objects of public welfare and christian benevolence have largely shared in his benefactions and personal influence. As an evidence of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens of New Haven and throughout the state, the State Republican committee made choice of him as Lieut. Governor of Conn. on the ticket with Wm. A. Buckingham for Governor in 1858, an honor which he positively and persistently declined, much to the chagrin of the party. Had he accepted the nomination he would have been triumphantly elected, as the ticket on which he was offered a nomination succeeded by an overwhelming majority and held the ground for nine successive years. At the breaking out of the war Mr. Trowbridge threw his whole soul into the cause of liberty, and though too far advanced in life to actively enter the field, he aided in sustaining the government in every possible way by his influence and wealth.

When the 10th Conn. Regt. of Vols. broke camp, with orders to proceed to their rendezvous, a beautiful state flag was presented to them by Mr. Trowbridge, made expressly for the Regt. by his wife and daughter. He afterwards presented flags to several Conn. regiments and swords to numerous officers, and was the first to provide a flag, which was raised and kept flying on the steeple of the Center church. He was one of the most active citizens in New Haven in forming the sanitary commission and contributed greatly to its success by pecuniary assistance as well as personal service.

When the time arrived in that great struggle to maintain the life of the nation, that rendered a draft necessary to furnish soldiers for the army, on the very day of the draft, when a crowd numbering from three to five thousand assembled at the north portico of the State House in New Haven, a citizens' meeting was organized with Mr. Trowbridge for chairman. Prominent citizens immediately came forward with offers of money for the encouragement of volunteers. Different individuals offered $15 each for a volunteer, some pledging that amount apiece for several men. Mr. Trowbridge stood at the head of that noble list, which contributed sufficient to raise the requisite number of men without a draft, he offering $15 apiece for 30 men, and at half-past four P. M. it was announced that the quota for New Haven was filled, when nine tremendous cheers from the assembly burst forth and the crowd separated for their homes. Mr. Trowbridge manifested the same unflinching zeal in the cause of liberty until victory crowned the Union arms. He has always manifested a taste for historical researches; was one of the founders of the New Haven Historical Society, and contributed an important article to the first volume of its collections, being a history of the construction of the Long Wharf in New Haven. He was also the projector of the Trowbridge Family History and furnished the pecuniary means to defray the expense of its preparation and publication. He has been for many yrs. Pres. of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce; a valued member of the First Congregational chh. and from early life one of the most efficient supporters of the First Ecclesiastical Society; m. Sept. 17, 1834, Caroline, dau. of Capt. Simeon and Polly (Harrison) Hoadley, b. April 30, 1818.

.11.4391. John Todd Trowbridge, b. Oct. 23, 1780; d. May 3, 1858, in his 78th yr. An obit. in the New Haven Journal says: "Capt T. was one of our town born and will be remembered by our older citizens as master of the ship 'Thomas' of this port, captured off the Isle of France by a British squadron, which took from the ship all hands except Capt. T., Chas. Peterson (his brother-in-law), first officer, and Benjamin Applewhite, the cook, and then put a prize crew of twenty men on board and ordered her to the Cape of Good Hope. On the passage Capt. T. and Mr. Peterson planned a recapture, and with the aid of some Lascars on board succeeded, and proceeded to Madagascar, where they landed the English crew. While here the ship was captured again, by a French frigate, under the Berlin and Milan decrees, and sent to the Isle of France. The French Governor restored the ship and part of the cargo to Capt. T., but the island was again taken by the British, and to avoid confiscation Capt. T. sold ship and cargo and escaped to Batavia. His life there was an eventful one for a year or two, during which he executed a most daring enterprise on the coast of Holland, where he recovered, with the aid of divers, upward of $250,000 in specie from a sunken wreck, but was again taken with all his specie by a British frigate, carried to Java, thence to Calcutta, where he was confined in the infamous Black Hole; finally taken to England and put into Dartmoor Prison, and was there at the time of the massacre, April 6, 1815; released on news of peace, April 10, arrived at New York, June 5, 1815, having been absent five and one-half years. Fond of enterprise, he went West, and settled at Rochester, N. Y., in 1816, where, for many years, at the head of the well known house of John T. Trowbridge & Co., he accumulated an ample fortune, but in the vicissitudes of life lost it, and in 1836 rem. to Racine, Wis., and lived there until his dec. in 1858. We doubt if a more eventful history than that of Capt. Trowbridge could be written of many persons. He was a brave, generous and honest man, and a Christian in faith and practice. When he went West there were no churches there, and religious services were held at his house, to which the people for miles around resorted until the country became settled; m. Polly Miles.

Infantry, Oct. 23, 1861. The regt. was employed in keeping open communication and similar work in Kv., until Oct., 1862. On the 8th of that month the regt. participated in the battle of Perryville, where it captured the flag of the 1st Tenn., saved the guns and caissons of an Indiana battery, the horses of which had been killed or disabled, and nobly conducted itself under the fire of the enemy. The flag was riddled by balls, the flag-staff severed in two places, and all but three of the color guard were killed or wounded. Mr. Trowbridge received a wound which probably would have resulted mortally but for his father's care in the hospital, and being brought away as soon as he could be removed. The regt. received the thanks of the battery saved, and a full set of colors, presented by the state of Indiana. Mr. T. was discharged as permanently disabled, but finally recovered sufficiently to re-enter the army in 1865, participate in the defense of Alatoona, and in the march of Sherman's army to the sea. On the voyage the vessel was wrecked on Portsmouth Beach between Capes Fear and Hatteras, during a three days' gale. Having paid salvage to the wreckers and observed all forms due to underwriters, Mr. Bronson bought at the sale of this wreck and of three other vessels, resulting from the same gale, a large amount of material, obtained a master builder and constructed a brig and a schooner suited to the West India trade. This consumed two years; the schooner made several voyages; the brig was completed just in time to be overtaken by Mr. Jefferson's embargo and made, instead of a West Indian, a Conn. voyage. After the embargo he went one voyage to W. I. as supercargo, and on return brought news of the capture by the French of his schooner "Philander," under Bonaparte's Berlin and Milan decrees, for having been bound to a British port; she was condemned, sold and bought in by the Capt. of the vessel; she was afterwards captured under the British orders in council for having been to a French port and again condemned.

Mr. B. then united with Jacob Townsend (Gilbert & Townsend) of New Hav., in the lake coasting trade, and with shipmasters and carpenters went to the Falls on the Oswego river, and on the ground now occupied by the thrifty village of Fulton, they cut the frame for a schooner of 100 and odd tons; two vessels were built and stores established at Oswego and Lewiston, when the war of 1812 broke up their business and their houses were invaded, plundered and burned. In 1814 he was appointed military and naval storekeeper at Oswego; after the war the business was resumed and extended by a branch at Black Rock. In 1822 he was elected to the State Senate, and during the two yrs. of his term succeeded in procuring a law authorizing the Oswego canal. Identified early with this public work he became its advocate and defender through a stormy conflict of twenty-five yrs.; so much was he connected with it, in the public estimation, that when he repaired to Albany with a remonstrance against a resolution to repeal the Oswego canal law, meeting Col. Aaron Burr in the hall of the Capitol, "he saluted me by saying, 'Ah! you are here to defend your canal,' and added, 'I am with you.' I said I believed all sensible men were with us, to which he replied, characteristically, 'Ah! my young friend, if that's all, you have a vast majority against you.'"

In 1829 Mr. B. was again returned to the Senate, and in 1830 was chairman of the Finance committee. Near the close of last session an Assembly bill for reducing the legal rate of interest and bank discounts, together with remonstrances from different parts of the state, were referred to the Finance committee. Mr. Bronson made an elaborate report; Senate doc., 106, April 12, 1833. Of this report Mr. Gallatin said, "It was an able and well reasoned document."

In 1834 Gen. Cass, Sec. of War, on recommendation by Silas Wright, appt. Mr. B. one of the visitors at the West Point Acad.; subsequently he was commissioned with others by the state of New York to settle for Otsego the exciting court house question. His later years, with slight interruptions, were devoted assiduously to commerce; he presided at the first village meeting in Oswego, May 13, 1828.—Bronson's Hist. of Waterbury. His health was excellent and his mind unimpaired to the last.

An Oswego correspondent of the N. Y. Sun writes: "Alvin Bronson died at his residence in this city this morning. Mr. Bronson was born in Waterbury, Conn., May 19, 1783, and was nearly 98 years of age. He came to Oswego in 1810 and engaged in the lake trade as one of the firm of Bronson, Townsend & Co., and in 1835 he was one of the well-known firm of Bronson & Crocker, who carried on a large commercial business on the lakes and canal until 1858. He was elected to the State Senate in 1822 and re-elected in 1829. During his second term as Senator he secured the passage of the bill authorizing the construction of the Oswego canal. At the session of the Senate of 1824, in order to prevent the vote of New York being cast for William H. Crawford, a bill was introduced giving the election to the people. Seventeen Senators—a majority of the Senate—opposed and defeated the bill. These seventeen Senators were known as the "infamous seventeen," on account of the popular clamor against them. Mr. Bronson was one of these, and the last survivor. In the war of 1812 Mr. Bronson had charge of the military stores belonging to the government at Oswego, and, to prevent their being captured by the British, threw them into the river, for which he was taken prisoner and confined at Kingston." Miss Tuttle composed the hymn sung at the Tuttle Family gathering in Sept., 1873, and has written many pieces which have appeared from time to time in various papers. The following are the first two and last two of a poem of eight verses, published in the Advocate and Guardian, in which she gives expression, no doubt, to her own trials and her consolation. It is headed, "Lead Me to the Rock that is Higher than I."

Life's tempest is raging, the winds loudly roar,
My frail barque is drifting far, far from the shore;
My heart is o'erwhelmed, Lord, hear my sad cry,
"Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I."

Distressed and perplexed, my spirit is faint,
To whom but to thee can I bring my complaint?
Dear Lord! thou art near me, and still will I cry,
"Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I."

Ere long thou wilt lift life's black cloud from my sight,
And lead from this darkness thy child into light,
And then shall I trace from my home in the sky,
This path to the "Rock that is higher than I."

Not one pain too many, not one sorrow nor tear,
Nor one pang at parting with hopes cherished here,
All, all these were needful my patience to try,
They led to "the Rock that was higher than I."

With his father's family he moved from Conn. in 1776, his father settling on the old Hazen road, near what is known as Hardwick street. At that time there was not a framed house in the town, the first one being built the year following. Every man in town having been invited to the raising. The town was organized the same year, Capt. Tuttle, then a boy of 14 years, distinctly remembers being present at the first election of town officers. He also recollected the first white child b. in the town. He retained his faculties to a remarkable degree, and could tell who settled on almost every lot in the town. He had lived to see two generations grow up and pass away. He lived and died without an enemy; an honest man; friendly and genial with all. One of God's noblemen." m. Oct. 12, 1780, Mary, dau. of Aaron and Mary Kimball, b. March 29, 1765.) He stud. med. and surgery and began practice with his preceptor when 19 yrs. of age. After graduating, he rem. from Newfane, Vt., to Fairfax in 1807, and became quite celebrated, locally, as a skillful physician; but being good-natured and a little heedless in money matters, he endorsed notes for people and almost as a matter of course, had them to pay and in consequence lost all his property in 1828-29. In 1830 rem. with wf. and two elder daus. to Detroit, Mich., and engaged successfully in practice of med. In 1833 bought land on bank of St. Clair river, St. Clair Co., Mich., and tried farming, without success financially, and in 1837 he returned to Detroit, and prac. med. when health permitted, which had been broken by farm labor, until his d. III. Amos Tuttle Hall, b. Oct. 7, 1814; designed for a liberal education, but prevented by want of means; decided then on mercantile business, and at the age of fifteen left home in Fairfax, Vt., walked 12 miles to St. Albans, and engaged for four years with Morris, Hoyt & Safford, to receive $40 and board the first year, $50 the second and third, and $60 the fourth. His health requiring a change of climate, he resolved to visit his parents in Detroit, his employers parting with him reluctantly and giving him a certificate of good character and a general letter of credit to be used if taken ill on the way. He left St. Albans, Vt., on the 13th of Oct., and arrived in Detroit on the 30th of Oct., in the afternoon; time, 17 days. Since then he has resided permanently at the West and has been engaged as mercantile clerk or proprietor nine yrs.; in office of Auditor General and State Treasurer four yrs.; in banking two yrs.; Comptroller of the city of Detroit four yrs., and in various railroad positions twenty-one yrs. Has been Secretary and Treasurer of Chicago, Burlington & Quincey R. R. since 1855; res. Chicago, Ill. He m. Oct. 23, 1837, Lucy, dau. of Nahum and Mary Winne Duncan of Perkinsville, Windsor Co., Conn.

The above facts were furnished by Mr. Hall himself in correspondence with the Compiler several years since, and with characteristic liberality and wisdom he subscribed for twenty copies of this work. He d. in Chicago, June 26, 1882; bu. in Detroit. The Religio Philosophical Journal (Swedenborgian) of Chicago, in an interesting obituary, gives some further particulars of his life and character: "He came to Chicago in 1853 and at once became interested in railroad building; helped to build the Mich. Central into Chicago. Assisted in making the survey of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincey R. R. to the Miss. river, on the completion of which he was made Superintendent, and soon after, Secretary and Treasurer. Later, the duties of Treasurer required his whole attention, as some twenty millions of dollars passed annually through his hands. About a year before his death, his health failing he resigned the onerous position of Treasurer and was appointed Secretary. At the time of his death, besides this office he held others, as Vice-Pres. of the Pullman Palace Car Co., Treas. of the Fort Dodge Coal Co., Treas. Chicago, Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Co. Mr. Hall was a fine specimen of what true spiritual culture can effect. He was familiar with the writings of Swedenborg, and absorbed all their better portions, and was much interested in the investigation of Spiritual phenomena. He was the friend of the poor and suffering everywhere, and though often imposed upon by appeals from the unworthy, neither these nor the graver cares and troubles of life disturbed the calm and sweet serenity of spirit, so beautiful and rare, that ever distinguished him. His memory will be cherished by thousands, and his good deeds will never be forgotten. Mr. Hall was a member of the Apollo Commandery, and the funeral services were conducted according to the Knights Templar's ritual. The floral display was magnificent; among the rest two pieces, each representing 'The Gates Ajar,' not inappropriately, for to him the gates had long been ajar and through the half open way angelic messages had been wafted."

The Chicago Times of July 10, 1882, contains an eloquent sermon to the memory of the late Amos T. Hall by the Rev. L. P. Mercer, in which he says: "His character was one of mingled strength and amiability. * * * Honest, upright, just and merciful, men everywhere felt the power of his life, and in the sanctuary at home he was priest and teacher with the fidelity and more than the gentleness of a patriarch of old."

.12.494. Newton Tuttle, b. June 21, 1768; res. Southbury, Conn.; farmer; during his leisure hours ardently availed himself of such means of instruction as were within his reach. About 1784, converted to Methodism, and helped to found the first society of that denomination in the town. Soon afterwards he was licensed to preach, and continued to officiate until his decease, having pastoral charge of the Southbury M. E. soc., for many yrs. and frequently preaching in other places. As his sons became old enough to go into business for themselves, he provided each with a farm, taking the burden upon himself and in no case allowing them to become indebted to others. In more than one instance he gave up his own homestead to a son and at great inconvenience to himself sought another residence. Nor did his paternal solicitude cease after he had started his children in life. He continued to watch over and advise them as long as he lived, and so elevated was his character that not one of them would have deemed it prudent to have disregarded his wishes. He became interested in some manufacturing enterprises which he carried on in connection with his farm. He did a large amount of public business, and was much employed as administrator and executor of estates and guardian for minors. It was his custom to take his wards into his own family and treat them as his children. A man of lofty character and rigid, perhaps stern, ideas of duty he expected those under his charge to conform to the same standard he had set up for himself. His wid. used to relate that at one time her husband being appointed guardian for a refractory boy, the terror of the whole neighborhood, she begged him not to take this boy into the family, lest his example might prove injurious to the other children. But she was overruled; the boy came and with no coercion beyond the influence and example of his guardian, turned out to be one of the best boys she had ever seen. If any disagreement arose between his neighbors and friends, he constituted himself a peace maker, and his efforts were always successful. The late Chief Justice Hinman used to say, that he had met with but few persons who possessed so strong a mind and as well-regulated a judgment as Newton Tuttle. He represented the town of Southbury in Conn. Leg., in 1824 and 1828; d. March 12, 1833. He m. Sept. 10, 1786, Ruth Pearce, b. Aug. 17, 1767, a gt. gr. dau. of Dea. John Pearce; she d. Y., abt. 1822; thence abt. 1826 to Ludlowville, Tompkins Co., N. Y., having bought the farm of Jonah Tooker, Esq., on which they lived for fifty yrs. Mrs. Sperry recd. a good education, and through life kept herself informed of current events; a singularly neat writer and correspondent—even up to her 80th year her letters are models of neatness and perspicuity. In her younger days a remarkably fine singer, and sacred music, in which every member of the family united, was a daily recreation. A member of the Methodist church for over seventy years; their house was always open to Methodist and other clergymen. At the church prayer and social meetings for more than sixty years "Father Sperry" was the chorister and "Mother Sperry" his able assistant. She had a wonderful memory for names, dates and events, inherited from her mother. She had always an almost stoical contempt for physical pain or suffering, manifested especially during her last illness. As a mother and domestic manager she had few equals. She d. of cancer in the breast, May 20, 1876, a. 83. He is still living in his 86th year.

IV. John Edson, b. Jan. 22, 1841; enlisted in Co. E, 8th Conn. Vols., Sept. 25, 1861. At the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862, he was shot through the breast and killed. The circumstances are related by Charles S. Buell, a fellow soldier of the same Co. who supported him as he fell. After a charge in three lines of battle the men were forced to fall back, and then to avoid a heavy fire were ordered to lie down; but it was soon found that the bullets of our own men in a piece of woods were striking near the head of the 8th regiment, which then got up and started to retreat. It was at this moment that Tuttle fell, so there is no doubt that the poor fellow was killed by the bullets of his own comrades. He did not die instantly and desired Buell to stay, but the regt. was ordered forward and he had to be left with many others to die. The field where he lay was lost and won several times that day. The next morning when details were made to bury the dead and bring in the wounded John was found by Buell stripped of his clothing, with his hands under his head, as if sleeping in repose and looking as natural as when alive. He was no doubt stripped before he died by the rebels. Forty of the 8th Conn., among whom was Tuttle were buried in a trench on the field of Antietam, near Sharpsburg. He was afterwards removed with the rest to the Antietam National Cemetery. "John Tuttle," continues his friend and comrade, Chas. S. Buell, "was killed by my side at the battle of Antietam nobly doing his duty. He was always a true and faithful soldier, never complaining. Many a sorry soldier has been compelled to cheer up faint heart by John's merry way. Not one that will count on the rolls of old Woodbury can show a fairer record than he in your history. We were together in many battles and I always found him brave to the uttermost. Before the battle in which he lost his life he was impressed with the idea of death, though never before, and yet he was in no wise daunted."—Cothren's Hist. of Woodbury, vol. 2, p. 1339: For letter of John E. # APPENDIX.

UNLOCATED.

In a list of New Haven settlers, between 1639 and 1645, the name of John Touttle appears. It seems doubtful as to his having been a settler. The name is not on the list of subscribers or proprietors. He received no allotment and paid no rates. He is not mentioned in the seating of the meeting house. It is certain, however, that there was a John Tuttle in the New Haven jurisdiction as appears from his appointment by the court in New Haven, in 1642, to order the affairs of the plantation at Southold. It was long taken for granted that John Tuthill, a prominent member of Mr. Young's company, who settled at Southold, was the New Haven appointee; but that idea is given up. A John Tuttle is said to have been concerned in the East Haven movement in 1644. As late as 1662 a John Tuttle, sr., is implied in the record of Wm. Tuttle's son John, as jr.

Capt. Jeremiah Tothill, came from England before 1686; Assist. Alderman, East Ward, city of N. Y., 1696, and Alderman of same, 1703-4-5; merchant; Anti-Leslerian. One of the first vestrymen of Trinity chh.; m. May 31, 1686, Jannekin DeKay of New York.

DEATH OF DANIEL TUTTLE.—Just before going to press we learn of the death of Daniel Tuttle, Esq., one of the oldest and most highly esteemed citizens of Reading, Schuyler Co., N. Y. He had for several years been slowly failing in health. On Saturday night he received a stroke of paralysis from the effects of which on his already enfeebled constitution he died on Wednesday morning, 9th inst. Deceased was born in Boston, 1797, and was consequently in his 80th year. He was a man of high attainments. Receiving a liberal education in his youth and keeping up his favorite studies and readings almost until the last, he was perhaps the most highly educated and one of the best informed men in the county. His long life was one of rare usefulness to the community in which his days were passed, and one which viewed as an entirety, is unblemished by inconsistency of any kind. He was one of the pioneers of this section and was a cotemporary and friend of Dr. Watkins, the founder of this village. His elder son, Adrian Tuttle, Esq., is the present Supervisor of Reading. His younger son, S. Watkins Tuttle, Esq., is a practicing attorney in New York. The funeral services will be held at the residence of his son, Adrian Tuttle, Esq., in Reading, on Friday, 11th inst., at 11 o'clock and at St. James' church, Watkins, N. Y., (of which the deceased was a member) at 12 o'clock m.—Feb., 1876.

After awhile the son seeing a motion among the bushes and supposing it to be a bear, shot and killed his father.

.11.2. Sarah Brown, b. Aug. 8, 1672; m. April 24, 1690, Joseph Doolittle, b. Feb., 1666-7. The published genealogies in relation to Joseph Doolittle's family are obviously incorrect. From a careful study of all the facts known to me, I believe that Sarah Brown was mother of several children of whom were Joseph and Lydia, whose descendants are given below, and that Isaac, born 1721, was son of Joseph, jr., and grandson of Joseph and Sarah Brown Doolittle; but I am not able now to prove it. Anyway the record is not out of place here as a large proportion of Joseph Doolittle's descendants intermarried with proved Tuttle descendants in other branches.

JACOB MELYN.

An incident relating to Sarah Tuttle, copied from the colonial records and republished untiringly, is likely to carry her name down to a far distant future, if nothing else does. It appears in the Conn. Hist. Soc. Collections, in Hatfield's Hist. of Elizabeth, N. J., in several genealogies and other works, besides going from time to time the rounds of the newspapers, with variations and without. It is proper, therefore, that the whole story should here be told.

At a court held in New Haven, May 1, 1860, Jacobeth Melyn and Sarah Tuttle were prosecuted for "sitting down on a chest together, his arm about her waist and her arm upon his shoulder or about his neck, and continuing in this sinful position about half an hour, in which time he kissed her and she kissed him, and they kissed one another as the witnesses testify." * * * * This complaint was made by Sarah's father under a law that whosoever should inveigle or draw away the affections of any maid or maid servant for himself or others, without first obtaining the consent of her parents or guardians, should pay, besides all the damages the parent might sustain, 40 shillings for the first offense, and for the second towards the same person, £4, and for the third, fined, imprisoned and corporally punished, as the Plantation court may direct.

Mr. Tuttle pleaded that Jacob had endeavored to steal away his daughter's affections, "but, that, Sarah denied, and it did not so appear to the court; but, as they had carried it in such a wanton, unceivil and lacious manner, they are sentenced to pay each of them 20 shillings to the treasurer" (one-half of Sarah's fine was subsequently remitted at the request of her father). The facts are suggestive.

The terms used by the court seem to us out of all proportion to the offense, though this kind of exaggeration was common in New England at that period. Innocent familiarities were sometimes referred to in words more befitting the description of an orgie or scene of wild dissipation. We can hardly imagine language strong or coarse enough for such a court to describe the "carryings on" of Romeo and Juliet, had the paternal Capulet brought suit before it against the youthful Montague. Care must therefore be used in judging of personal acts or conduct not specially set forth, which occupy so much space in our early records. This it may be was also a case of true love frustrated by paternal interference. William Tuttle naturally shared with his fellow colonists, the general feeling of dislike and distrust of the Dutch; in his case, intensified by the recollection of his treatment and losses at the hands of the authorities at New Amsterdam, in the Delaware matter; and though the Melyn's were in antagonism to Gov. Stuyvesant, Mr. Tuttle could not be expected to view with favor his daughter's alliance with one of that race.

Who was Jacob Melyn? "His name," says Dr. Hatfield in his Hist. of Elizabeth, N. J. "is familiar to every student of Dutch-American history. He was son of Cornelius Melyn the patroon of Staten Island, of which he was the sole proprietor, by a grant from the home government.

Cornelius Melyn sailed from the New Netherlands in 1639, returned in 1640 for his wife Jannekin and children, and planted a colony on the Island in 1641; which was broken up by Indians in 1643. He removed to New Amsterdam (N. Y.) and lived on Broad st., east side, between Stone and Pearl. He was fined by Gov. Stuyvesant and banished for seven years. In 1647 he returned to Holland for redress and was wrecked on the voyage, losing one of his sons and barely escaping with his own life. He was sustained by the home government, but Stuyvesant still opposing, he made another voyage to Holland and returning to N. Amsterdam again established himself (1650) on Staten Island, until his colony was again dispersed by the Indians in 1655. Soon afterwards he removed to New Haven where he and his son Jacob took the oath of fidelity April 7, 1657. In 1659 he returned to Holland, settled his difficulties and relinquished Staten Island to the West India Company. He d. in New Netherlands 1674, leaving wf. and three sons, Jacob, Cornelius and Isaac, and three daus., Marian, who m. and resided at New Haven; Susanna, who m. Jacob Schillinger, and Magdalen, who m. Jacob Soper, both New York merchants.

Jacob Melyn was b. in Antwerp about 1640, accompanied his father on several voyages, and as we have seen was in New Haven 1657, and there fined by Gov. Newman for kissing Sarah Tuttle in 1660. He m. in 1662, Hannah, dau. of George Hubbard of Guilford, Conn. In 1665 he went with a company from New Haven to Elizabeth, N. J. He was familiar with the locality and with the Dutch and Indian languages, and therefore a valuable member of the colony. He was allowed for himself, wife and two servants, 160 acres; his patrimony was 450 acres. He was a partner in the Whaling Co., 1669; during the Dutch rule, 1673-4, he was in high favor, being appointed one of the magistrates of the town and captain of the militia company. He rem. to New York in 1674, and lived in Mill street lane (South William St.). Two of his children were bap. in the Dutch chh., N. Y., Oct. 3, 1674, and three others, Daniel, Samuel and Abigail, Aug. 6, 1677. About 1683 he rem. to Boston, probably to educate his son Samuel who grad. at Harv. Col. 1696, and was subsequently settled as minister at Elizabeth, N. J. At Boston he traded in leather; served several years as constable and d. Dec., 1706. His dau. Abigail m. (1) William Tilley, (2) Samuel Sewell, chief justice of Mass. His dau. Joanna m. 1683. Rev. Jonathan Dickinson of Elizabeth, afterwards Pres. Col. of N. J. (Princeton). See Hatfield's Hist. of Elizabeth.

NOTES FROM DR. STILES' HISTORY OF THE JUDGES.

Of about 130 judges appointed by the commons house of parliament only 74 sat, and of these, 67 were present at the last session, and were unanimous in passing the definitive sentence upon the king, and 59 signed the warrant for his execution (1649). Of these 59, 24 were dec. at restoration in 1660; 27 judges were then taken, tried and condemned; some were pardoned; 9 judges and five others as accomplices were executed; 16 judges fled and escaped. One shot himself in Holland, another fled to Lausania and was there assassinated; three fled to New England; the fate of the rest is unknown to me.

Richard Whalley m. Frances, dau. of Sir Henry Cromwell and aunt of Oliver, by whom he had Edward and others. Edward was brought up as a merchant. He joined the parliamentary forces and distinguished himself at the battle of Nasby, 1645.

He m. a sister of Sir George Middleton, Kt., and had several children. One of his daughters m. William Goffe. The last letter of Whally to this dau. was dated Hadley, 1679, where he d. and was buried in the cellar, it is said, of Rev. Mr. Russell, the minister of H.

Joane Cromwell, aunt of Oliver, m. Francis Barrington. Her sister, Elizabeth, m. John Hampden, father of John H., who was one of the five members of Parliament excepted against by Charles I.

William Goffe was son of Rev. Stephen Goffe, a Puritan divine. Goffe's diary by himself, from 1660 to 1667, in several pocket vols., received from the Russell family, is preserved in Cotton Mather's library in Boston. Goffe and Whalley arrived at N. Hav. March 27, 1661—in Hartford same month—and May 11 removed into a mill near New Haven, and thence into the woods, where they met Jones, Sperry and Burrill, who conducted them to Hatchet Harbor. In 1664 or 1665 Dixwell came to them.

Mr. Goodyear had bought of the town of New Haven the rich plain lying west of West Rock, about 1,200 acres, and on this had planted his farmer, Richard Sperry, which farm Sperry afterwards owned, and now above a century has been known as Sperry's farm. In records, April 23, 1660, I find mention of Mrs. Goodyear and her farmer Sperry. Mrs. Goodyear had built on this tract a house for Sperry, and about one mile southwest stood the house of Ralph Lines, the only houses in 1661 westward from New Haven between West Rock and Hudson's river; except a few at Derby all was wilderness. About two miles north west of Sperry's was a mill.

In 1785 I visited Mr. Joseph Sperry, then aged 76, grandson of the first Richard and son of Daniel, who d. 1751, a. 86, from whom Joseph received the tradition. Daniel was 6th son of Richard, and built a house at south end of Sperry farm, in which Joseph now lives, not half a mile west from the cave which Joseph showed me. Through Joseph came the tradition of the judges being frightened from the cave by the glaring eyes of some wild animal.

Bladen's Rock, Holmes Race and Holmes Fort, the Lodge or Morocco, as well as Providence Hill, all had their names from the judges.

A Mr. Valentine Wilmot, now living in Bethany, knew all the ancient people at Sperry's farm. He was a great hunter.

Stephen Ball, Esq., now (1794) a. 67 [p. 146], said Col. Dixwell put up with two sedate old people, Mr. Ling and his wife, who had no children. Mr. Ling at his death requested D. to assist his wife and his wife to be kind to D. Mr. Ling left all his property to his wife, and Dixwell assisted in settling the estate, and afterwards, not knowing any better way of assisting, married her. She soon died, and he married another wife and had children. Thus far Dea. Ball says.

Mr. Ling d. 1673; inv. £900. His house was at the corner of College and Grove sts. Rev. Mr. Pierpont's house stood about where Judge Bristol's house now is (cor. of Elm and Temple) on what was called Mr. Pierpont's Square. So Mr. P. and D. could meet and exchange visits without going into the street. (Wall street did not then exist. Mr. Davenport's house was on Elm, near intersection of Orange st.; Gov. Jones' opposite on north side; Gov. Bishop's on northeast corner State and Elm streets.)

James Davids and Joanna Ling, wid. of Benjamin, were m. Nov. 3, 1673. She d. between Nov. 15 and 26, same yr. He m. Bathsheba Howe, Oct. 23, 1677, and d. March 18, 1688-9, in his 82d year. She d. in Middletown, Conn., Dec. 27, 1729, a. 83 or 85 (grave-stone says 86). Children: 1, Mary, b. June 9, 1679; m. Dec. 4, 1707, John Collins of Mid., and had several chil. 2, John, b. March 6, 1680; m. Sept. 1, 1708, Mary, dau. of John Prout of N. Hav., and settled as a goldsmith in Boston. 3, Elizabeth, b. July 14, 1682; d. soon.

The tradition that the three judges, Goffe, Whalley and Dixwell, were all buried in New Haven has been very generally accepted there as true. As to Dixwell there is no doubt, and many well informed persons are quite as sure that Whalley was buried near Dixwell. (See N. Har. Hist. Coll., vol. 1, paper by Thomas R. Trowbridge, Esq.)

The judges were afraid that their graves would be desecrated and their remains treated with indignity if discovered by their enemies—a well founded apprehension as appears by the fact that even as late as 1775 such graves were grossly insulted by British officers. Those who had harbored the judges were equally bound to secrecy by fear of the vengeance of the crown. The fate of Lady Lisle, the wife of a regicide who had died abroad, was not likely to be unheeded. She was tried in 1685 by Judge Jeffries for concealing Mr. Hicks, a dissenting minister under ban, and was beheaded. Hence the need of secrecy in all matters concerning the judges, living or dead, and of employing only the most discreet and trusty persons in such affairs.

Dr. Stiles firmly believed that Whalley was finally buried in N. Hav. He traces the tradition to the descendants of Thomas Tuttle, "who, with Major Mansfield, was appraiser of Dixwell's estate in 1689. His son Caleb Tuttle was intimately connected with the family of Gov. Jones, and well acquainted with Major Mansfield, was born and all his days lived a near neighbor to them both, and to Samuel Bishop, son of the Governor, and to Mr. Pierpont; and was certainly in the way of secret information sufficient for the purpose of this impregnation—at least that Whalley as well as Dixwell were buried here, and for the designation of their graves. The conclusion, however, is that Dixwell only of the three regicides, Goffe, Whalley and Dixwell, was buried in New Haven.

In 1647 he succeeded Miles Standish as commander of the military company at Plymouth. He was Assistant to the Governor from 1661 to 1665; then went to New York to assist His Majesty's Commissioners in organizing the new government, and was appointed Mayor, being the first who held the office under the English rule. He was twice or three times Mayor. He was bu. by side of his wf., and tomb-stone says: "1674: here lyeth ye body of ye Hon. Thomas Willett, Esq., who d. Aug. ye 4, in ye 64th yr. of his age, Anno." ## PATERNAL ANCESTRY OF COL. AARON BURR.

Considerable discrepancy exists in published accounts, and the best information in print is but meagre. In History of Bridgewater, Mass., a very erroneous lineage is given as follows: Jonathan Burr, minister at Dorchester; John of Fairfield, Conn.; Judge Peter; Rev. Isaac; Rev. Aaron. Other accounts are evidently more or less astray. So far as I have been able to gather it:

JEHU BURR of Roxbury, carpenter. Came with Winthrop, 1630. Appointed to inspect bridges between Roxbury and Boston, 1633; rem. to Fairfield, Conn., and was Representative, 1641-5. Had four sons, Jehu, John, Daniel and Nathaniel.

JEHU BURR, 2d, d. 1692.

JOHN or JEHU BURR, m. Mary, dau. of Andrew Ward, and had: Daniel Burr, est. adm. 1727, names wf. Elizabeth, whose maiden name and lineage is not traced; 10 chil., of whom 9 received from father's estate £545 each, and double to eldest son; names, Jehu, Stephen, Peter, David, Moses, Aaron, Hannah, Mary Wheeler, Elizabeth Hull, Jane Sherwood.

REV. AARON BURR, Pres. of Princeton Col.

ANDREW WARD of Hartford, 1636; one of the five magistrates; came from Watertown, Mass. In 1637 Collector for Wethersfield; rem. to Stamford with the Wethersfield settlers; chosen assistant to the New Haven Court, 1646; will recorded at Fairfield date, June 8, 1659, names wf. Esther, and sev. chil., of whom:

ANDREW WARD, d. 1791; m. Tryal Meigs (dau. of John of Guilford, Conn., who was s. of Vincent Meigs); had dau.:

SIR GEORGE DOWNING.

George Downing was a preacher among the Independents and Chaplain to Col. Okey's regt. in Cromwell's army. In 1653 he was Commissary General to the army in Scotland; M. P. for a Scottish borough 1654 and 1656; agent in Holland, 1658-60; turning Royalist, was knighted by Charles II, May 21, 1660; M. P. of Morpeth, 1661, and again envoy to Holland. Here he caused the arrest of Cols. Okey and Barksted, and Miles Corbet, three of the judges who were sent to England and executed. For this act he was reprobated by all honorable men, and the expression, "He was an arrant Downing," became the superlative of meanness and scoundrelism. Lord Macauley, in historical essay, says: "Tools of office, who like Downing, had been proud of lacquering his (Cromwell's) coach, might insult him in loyal speeches and addresses." He was made a baronet in 1663, and d. in July, 1684. He had been one of the four Tellers of the English Exchequer, and Downing st., London, was so named for him.

DR. CHARLES CHAUNCEY, writing to Pres. Stiles, says: "I have read all of Mr. Stoddard's writings, but have not been able to see in them the strength of genius some have attributed to him."

RICHARD GRAFTON.

Richard Grafton, Esq., citizen and grocer of London, descended from William de Grafton who took his name from the township of Grafton in Cheshire 1333, who had sons William and David. [Ormerod's Cheshire.] "His ancestors enjoyed a large revenue in lands in the city of Worcester, and in Grafton, Fliford and Pendock in Worcester Co.; also other lands in the Co. of Stafford, as appeareth by a deed (which I have seen) dated in June 29. Hen. 8 (1538), but at this day dispersed into strange hands. Nevertheless I wish Virtue her due reward; then shall not the bearer (a trae lover of arms) depart empty handed. This coat of arms was attested, ratified and confirmed in a letter testimonial to Spain, by William Flower, Esq. Norrey, King at Arms, Aug. 16, 1512, to Richard Grafton, son. of Ralph, who was son of Ralph Grafton (spelled Garfton) of the County Palatine of Cheshire—Gentleman: This coat was also confirmed to Richard Grafton of London, Gent., 3d son of Richard Grafton of the said city by Robert Cook 1584." [Gwilliam's Heraldry.] Arms: "Party per saltire; sable and ermine; a lion rampant or armed and langued gules."

He was brought up as a merchant, as was his associate and partner in translating and printing Bibles, Edward Whitechurch. The occasion of their becoming printers may be seen in Fox's Martyrology. In 1537 Grafton and Whitechurch caused to be printed at Hamburg or at Paris, more probably at Ham., a folio edition of the Bible. The few deviations from Coverdale's translations were supplied by John Rogers [John Rogers burned at Smithfield 1555] who assumed the name of Matthews—hence called Matthews' Bible. This brought Grafton into favor with Cranmer, Cromwell and Bonner until the latter became Bishop of London. In 1538 Grafton obtained permission from Francis I, King of France, through the intercession of Hen. 8 to print an English Bible at Paris, the workmen there being more skillful and the paper better. But when the work was done the printers were summoned before the "Inquisition of the Faith" and the whole edition (2,500 copies) seized and delivered to be burned. But the officer through covetousness sold four "dry vats" of them to a haberdasher to lap caps in, and these were bought again, but the proprietors, Grafton & Whitechurch, suffered great loss. After the printers had appeared before the "Inquisition of the Faith" the proprietors and Coverdale the corrector were sent for, but being warned in time, fled.

Afterwards, encouraged by Cromwell, who favored the universal reading of the Scriptures, Grafton & Whitechurch, went to Paris and got the types, presses and workmen, brought them to London and so became printers themselves; for in 1539 they printed in London the Bible in large folio under the direction of Coverdale and patronage of Cranmer with some improvements on "Matthews' translation." This is called "The Great Bible" and was the first English Bible printed in England.

Soon after the execution of Lord Cromwell (July 20, 1540,) Grafton was imprisoned six weeks in the Fleet Prison for printing Matthews' Bible and "The Great Bible" without notes, and before he came out was bound in £100 not to sell or print any more Bibles until the King and clergy had agreed on a translation. He was called before the council on a charge of printing a "ballade" in favor of Lord Cromwell, and Grafton's quondam friend Bonner being present aggravated the cause by reciting a little chat between them in which Grafton had intimated that he was sorry for Cromwell's apprehension. But the Lord Chancellor Audley turned the discourse, and the matter seems to have ended.

In a few years Grafton was appointed printer to Prince Edward and with Whitechurch had special patents (Jan. 8, 1543,) for printing the church service books and primers, Latin and English.

In 1 Edw. VI, April 22, 1547, he had a patent for printing the statute books or acts of Parliament. G. himself tells us that he wrote the greater part of Hall's Chronicles. Hall died in 1547 and next year Grafton printed said Chronicles, entitled The Chronicles of the two illustrious families of York and Lancaster. In 1562 an abridgement of Grafton's Chronicles was printed by Richard Tottel his son-in-law. And in 1569 Chronicles of England in full with lists of sheriffs, etc. One Richard Grafton was mem. of Parliament for city of London 1553 and '56 and '56-57, and Dugdale thinks he was our Richard but his editor thinks not. Some time temp. Elizabeth he fell down stairs and broke his leg in two places and was lame until he died about 1572. He had a son Richard who was bred to the law, and of eminence as he was counsellor of the Stationer's Company.

FROM HANSARD'S TYPOGRAPHIA.

Richard Grafton was classically educated and as shown by his writings must have understood the languages. "His original letters," says Hansard "to Archbishop Cranmer and Lord Cromwell show that he was encouraged by and admitted to the conversation of the nobility and great men of his time. He may have been in early life a grocer but was probably bred a printer. He published the New Testament in 1526. Previous to 1537 he dwelt in Antwerp, where he printed Tyndal's New Testament and afterwards his Bible; revised and corrected by Myles Coverdale. Grafton and Whitechurch continued in partnership and in friendship for many years. Their names are sometimes found separately in the same edition of books. When so many bearing Grafton's name had been printed the name was taken out and that of Whitechurch inserted in the same place.

In London he lived in a part of a dissolved house of Grey Friars, afterwards granted by Edward VI for a hospital, called Christ's Hospital for the Maintenance and Education of Orphans. He is believed to be the same Richard Grafton who was mem. of Parliament for the city of London 1553-4 and again in 1556-7, and for the city of Coventry, Warwickshire, in 1563 and 1566.

"The elegant device of Richard Grafton, Esq.," says Hansard, whose Typographia contains an engraving of it (and also the device of Richard Tottle, Hand and Star), "was a tun or barrel with a tree growing out of the bung hole. Motto from the 1st Epistle of James, 21st v., has a quaint allusion to his name: "Suscipete insitum Verbum." (Receive the engrafted word.) This play upon his name was not confined to himself, and not so complimentary in the instance of John Stow, a rival antiquary, at whose works Grafton sneered as "the memories of superstitious foundations, fables and lyes, foolishly stowed together," to which Stow retorted of the works of Grafton, as "the rattling of empty tunnies and fruitless Graffes of Momus offspring."

EDWARD WHITECHURCH (Grafton's partner) m. the wid. of Archbishop Cranmer. She was Cranmer's 2d wife, the first being "Black Joanna." When Cranmer was ambassador in Germany he became attached to the niece of the eminent German scholar and author, "Ossiander," non de plume for Andrew Honeman. Her name was Margaret, and when married to Cranmer was 17 years of age, and he was 49. She is described as having bright eyes, a pretty mouth and a sweet temper. She had an Abbey in Notts, which had been granted to Cranmer by Henry VIII.

MILES COVERDALE, b. in Yorkshire, 1487, was almoner to Queen Catharine Parr, and delivered a discourse at her funeral, 1548. He became bishop of Exeter, April 14, 1551, and d. 1568.

NOTES OF HISTORY OF THE BIBLE.

In the 8th century Bede translated the whole Bible into Saxon. Portions of the Scriptures had been previously translated at various times. The Popes forbid the reading of these translations, and in the 14th century they had become unintelligible to the common people by reason of change in the language.

Wickliff translated the whole Bible from Latin copies, not being acquainted with the original, Hebrew and Greek. In 1390 a bill was brought in House of Lords to suppress it. In 1408 Archbishop Arundel decreed death for reading any translation, and several suffered accordingly. Caxton began to print in England with movable metallic types in 1474. Time of Henry VIII, William Tyndal translated the New Testament from the original Greek into English, which was printed at Hamburg or Antwerp about 1526; this was first printed edition of any part of the Holy Scriptures in the English language. The impression was sent over to England, and eagerly sought and read by the people, but excited alarms in the Romish church, and Sir Thomas More and Tonsal, bishop of London, caused all copies to be burned at St. Paul's Cross. In the meantime Tyndal with Miles Coverdale translated and published in 1530 a part of the Old Testament with reflections on the English clergy and bishops, and the same year a more correct translation of the New Testament. He was soon seized and imprisoned by the Emperor through the influence of Henry VIII and his ministers, and in 1536 put to death at Villepont near Brussels, by decree of the Assembly at Augsburg. In 1539 George Joye published parts of the Old Testament. In 1535 Miles Coverdale published in folio the first English translation of the whole Bible, probably printed at Zurich. This was followed in 1537 by the Matthew's Bible, printed abroad, and in 1539 by "The Great Bible," printed in London by Grafton & Whitechurch, of which several editions were printed, particularly one in 1540, for which Cranmer wrote a preface, hence called Cranmer's Bible. In 1546 Henry VIII prohibited the reading of Wickliff's, Tyndal's and Coverdale's, or any other not allowed by Parliament. In 1557-60 a Bible was published in Geneva by refugees from England, called the Geneva Bible. This had Calvinistic notes, and was therefore the favorite with the Puritans. In 1568 a new translation was made by a commission consisting of fifteen persons, of whom eight were bishops, hence called the Bishops' Bible. The present version, revised in our day by a commission composed of the most eminent scholars and divines of the English speaking race, was begun by authority of King James, 1607, and published 1611.

MOTTOS.

The Tothill Arms has no motto. With a little study, however, one might be devised. The motto of English families are to a large extent a play upon their names; such as that of Hope, My hope is not broken. Homan, I am a man. Wake, Watch and pray. A few consist of a single common word, perhaps on the principle that a word to the wise is enough. As that of St. Vincent, Thus; of Getting, Try; of Horne, True. Others refer to some event or achievement in which an ancestor took part, as that of Exmouth, Algiers; of Wodehouse, Agincourt. Many are of a religious character, as that of Chetwode, Christ my Crown; of Dalhousie, Pray and labor; of Mill, Help, O God. The motto of Kay seems to be merely an effort at alliteration, Keep your own Kin Kind, though possibly the sentiment may have some affinity with the etymology or associations of the name. The motto of Grace seems vaunting, but is not on that account a very rare exception, Our deeds agree with our name. Some of the most ancient and noble names associated with the highest dignities are the most unassuming. As that of the Earl of Warwick and the Duke of Argyle, I scarce call these things my own, (alluding to the honors of ancestry), or that of the Duke of Buccleugh, I love.

A fine motto borne by Fane, Earl of Westmoreland—as usual, a pun—implies a lofty ideal of the dignity of life and a corresponding precept. Bring nothing base to (fane) the Temple. The constant iteration of such a motto in the family calling it their own, ought to have an ennobling influence.

In the subjoined list the Latin motto is followed by the English translation and that by the family name, and title of the bearer. Abbreviations.—Bt. for Baronet; B., Baron; V., Viscount; E., Earl; M., Marquis; D., Duke.

LINEAL AND DIRECT.

In England the law determines the succession of titles and of intestate real property according to a plan originally designed to maintain and perpetuate the feudal system. This plan gives precedence to the male line and to the eldest branch of that line. Hence called the direct line. In this country the law recognizes no distinction among heirs in intestacy. Male and female, young and old, share alike. The terms "lineal" and "direct," so often used by writers in this country to give emphasis to a statement of pedigree or descent, have no application, and are objectionable as involving a fallacy. All descent genealogically is in lines or lineal. And it is equally clear that all descent is direct; though the term as frequently used implies the absurdity that the child is not directly descended from the mother.

COLLATERAL DESCENT.

This strange combination of terms is sometimes used to express the idea of collateral relationship; thus: John Smith is collaterally descended from Henry Smith, said Henry being brother of John Smith's ancestor. The essential condition of descent is parentage, therefore John Smith is not descended collaterally or any other way from Henry, but is collaterally related to him by descent from his brother. In other words, collateral descent is a contradiction in terms.

AVERAGE DURATION OF HUMAN LIFE. SUCCESSION OF GENERATIONS.

The two ideas expressed in the above heading are sometimes confounded or regarded as one and the same. They are essentially different. The average duration of human life depends on, or is greatly affected by conditions and surroundings—is longer or shorter at different periods and localities in proportion as these are more or less favorable to health and longevity. Sanitary improvements in cities, the drainage of marshes and wet lands, the increase of comforts and the lightening of labor among the poorer classes are among the physical causes which have prolonged the average term of human life from twenty years in the sixteenth century to forty years in the nineteenth. The work of amelioration has but just begun. With the progress of improvement, the diminution of unnecessary, unequal and mischievous taxation, the equalization of the public burdens, the fair or just distribution of the proceeds of industry, and the intellectual and moral advancement that is made possible by and will keep pace with the material progress of society, the average of life, it is easily conceivable, will increase to fifty, sixty or seventy years.

The succession of generations, on the other hand, depends on a natural law of development and the duration of the child bearing period in woman, which, under similar social and climatic conditions are always about the same. This period, in the Temperate Zones, is practically included between the ages of 18 and 42, the average of which is 30. This approximates very closely to the average interval of succession between parent and child, of several actual pedigrees compiled from English genealogical works of the best authority and from public records in this country covering a period of thirteen centuries and including over forty generations in unbroken line.

The fact is not a mere matter of curiosity or personal interest, but is a very important aid and of great use in chronological and historical researches. We therefore offer no apology for the following lists. If we are accused of vanity or pride in thus connecting ourselves with the great of former times we must bear the imputation (under protest) as best we may, conscious that tens of thousands in this country, to say nothing of the Old World, must share with us the shame and disgrace such as it is. At the same time we offer in mitigation that we have only Hobson's choice in the matter. We must trace to Charlemagne or to nobody, for there are no other authentic European pedigrees without hiatus or break reaching back so far as those that lead back to him.

The genealogy of the descendants of Confucius goes back nearly twenty-five centuries, and includes from seventy-five to eighty generations, but we have no part or lot in that. The man who of all others is least likely to pride himself on any ancestral line is the genealogist, for he considers more than others "how many progenitors every one of us has had—rich, poor, kings, slaves, Greek and barbarian."

From the birth of the first [56C] to that of the last [1864] includes a period of 1304 years, in all, forty-three generations, an average of a fraction over thirty years as the interval of succession. This is the measure of a beat or the rhythm of human life in the march of the centuries.

In tracing back any lineage, however ancient or illustrious, we reach far within the pale of modern history the limit of authentic record. Beyond that limit tradition and fable mingle with fact and begets uncertainty; as we proceed the darkness increases and we resort to conjecture, until finally the thread is entirely lost in the generalities that compose our knowledge of the remote past.

A curious pedigree, and as to its earlier part of late discovery connects Queen Victoria with King David of Jerusalem. The first step, so to speak, is an enormous leap of about forty generations to Iber Scott. Then settling down to detail we have Fergusmere, Douingarde, Cobram, Edram, Eric, about 550 to 600 A.D., Binde, Eacach, Brich, Donald, Eachdach, Each, Alpin, Kenneth McAlpin, Constantine II, K. of S., Donald IV., Malcolm I., Kenneth III., Malcolm II.; Albanach, Duncan, killed by Macbeth, Malcolm III., Maud, who m. Henry I., King of Eng. and so on. There is no inherent improbability in such a lineage; there is not a human being on the globe that has not a much older pedigree; the wonder is in the discovery of adequate evidence, if any such exists, to entitle it to credibility as to details.

An interesting passage in the learned Gibbon's great work, gives us a glimpse of a very long line, indeed, though still short by several centuries of that from the psalmist. The first part of it begins with the Macedonian Kings and is shadowy down to Alexander the Great [355, B. C.], or to a few of his immediate predecessors; and again lapses into obscurity and is but a tradition down to Constantine the Great, Emperor of Rome and builder of Constantinople [330, A.D.] Thence for about fifteen generations it rests on the claim of the mother of Basil, Emperor of Constantinople 867, A.D.

"The genealogy of Basil, the Macedonian (if it be not the spurious offspring of pride and flattery), exhibits a genuine picture of the revolution of the most illustrious families. The Arsacides, the rivals of Rome, possessed the sceptre of the East near four hundred years; a younger branch of the Parthian Kings continued to reign in Armenia, and their royal descendants survived the partition and servitude of that ancient monarchy. Two of these, Artabanus and Chienes, escaped or retired to the court of Leo the First; his bounty seated them in a safe and hospitable exile in the province of Macedonia; Adrianople was their final settlement. During several generations they maintained the dignity of their birth, and their Roman patriotism rejected the tempting offers of the Persian and Arabian powers, who recalled them to their native country. But their splendor was insensibly clouded by time and poverty, and the father of Basil was reduced to a small farm, which he cultivated with his own hands; yet he scorned to disgrace the blood of the Arsacides by a plebian alliance; his wife, a widow of Adrianople, was pleased to count among her ancestors, the great Constantine; and their royal infant was connected by some dark affinity of lineage or country with the Macedonian Alexander."—Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

From Basil the line is unbroken; he d. 886; his s. Leo VII., "the philosopher," Em. of Con. 886; d. 912; m. 908, Zoe.

Constantine VII., Em. of Con., 959; d. 963; m. Helena.

Edgar, m. Edward the exile, of the 6th generation, from Alfred the Great.

St. Margaret, "Lady of England," d. 1093; m. Malcolm III., King of Scotland.

David, K. of S., m. Maud, dau. of Walteof, Earl of Northumberland, Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, m. Adela de Warren (No. 19 of former pedigree).

He was fully six feet in height, with a full well-knit frame, and there were few men who could swing a scythe or cradle as far as he could; his mental matched his physical qualities for though his education was limited to about six months at the district school, neither his letters or conversation betrayed any lack of education; he was a great reader, especially of controversial writings in defense of the Epis. chh; he d. in fall of 1841; both bu. in the old bu. ground in Geneva, N. 923251. Wm. A. Clarke, desired an education and was encouraged by his mother, but his father lacking means wanted him to be a farmer. He studied winters and became a school teacher, and by studying nights kept in advance of his scholars. He acquired Latin without an instructor and taught Orrin, all in the intervals of farm work. By working for the neighbors and careful economy they were enabled to save enough to enter and support themselves in Cheshire Academy. Peter Auspach, the father of his wife, was Commissary under Gen. Knox in the Rev. war. Mr. Clarke was bu. in a beautiful plot of ground he gave to the village of Brighton, Mich., for a cemetery and an Epis. chh., on which a small substantial brick edifice has been erected with an inscription on its stone altar and font; his chil. were b. in the following order:

I. Mary Hetherington.

II. Chloe Atwater; these two sisters opened at Ann Arbor, Mich., the first school for young ladies in the State, and continued successful teachers for more than thirty years; Chloe A. instructed a class in history; both delighted in acquiring and imparting knowledge.

923252. Orrin Clark, stud. in Epis. Acad. at Cheshire and entered the ministry; His bro., Wm. A., said of him that he had the most exact and logical mind of the brothers, but was of too retiring disposition to rise; he was a zealous and untiring workman in Western N. Y., where controversy with other religious bodies was a necessity of the times and he was the ablest of her defenders there; through diffidence, he never used name or nom de plume in his published writings, and others won commendation and elevation for what he had achieved; he was rector of Trinity chh., Geneva, fourteen years and d. in office; he was one of the main workers in establishing Hobart Col., Geneva, but others with more self-assertion than he possessed won the laurel; he d. in less than a year after his 3d m. and was bu. in Geneva; a memorial tablet was erected in Trinity church and transferred to the fine stone chh. which replaced the first erection; he m. 923254. John A. Clark enjoyed greater advantages than his brothers. While preparing for Col. at Fairfield Acad. his f. fearing that he was idling, ordered him home and set him to hard labor on the farm. This discipline had the desired effect and no more complaint was heard and the lesson was never forgotten; in addition to his parish labors at Palmyra he began a system of working for the church, writing the first of his stories The McEllen Family, illustrative of the Book of Common Prayer. It was a true sketch of a family in his parish under another name; his nephew, Rev. John W. Clark, afterwards rector of the same parish, met the heroine of the story, "Aunt Alice," then aged and infirm, and learned from her own lips what the Prayer Book had been to her, as a constant teacher and companion.

After the b. of his first child, the mother was attacked by a malady sometimes incident to motherhood, and was obliged to go to New York for treatment, and he was invited by Rev. Dr. Lyle, rector of Christ chh. in Ann st. to become his assistant; he was a good word painter, rapid and impassioned in utterance, but distinct; his wife partly recovered; she was a woman of majestic presence, rare beauty and great mental gifts; she had three children, who all died and the cloud came back to the mother but went again, and he then took charge of Grace chh., Providence, R. I., and afterward at St. Andrews, Phila.; in both parishes he met with great success, but was obliged to resign the latter on account of pulmonary disease; he then became editor and proprietor of the Episcopal Recorder, the church paper of the diocese, which prospered greatly in his hands and became a profitable investment; he also edited several editions of a religious annual, The Christian Keepsake.

I. John Alexander, lawyer; m. abt. 1861.

VIII. Thomas, the first Capt. in Waterbury (Plymouth).

About 1755, Matthew Blakeslee of No. Haven had a son Oliver born, who became one of the most noted men in the place and held it for over 60 years. Called "Master Blakeslee;" exact date of birth and death not known, but he lived 84 years between 1740 and 1830. School teacher 27 winter and 3 summer seasons; taught navigation and was county surveyor, appointed to the latter office unsought, by Conn. Leg. An indenture, 1783, signed by 7 men and 2 witnesses, that he was to teach 6 months at Mt. Camel for $2 6s a month and board. He was the best penman of his day. Eri Bradley has in his possession a bit of paper cut the size of an old-fashioned silver ninepence, on which in 1786 he wrote with a quill pen, in beautiful legible letters, the Lord's Prayer. His copies in the old writing books remain today like able specimens of the engravers art. His methods of discipline were quaint, but masterful of the wicked youth under his care. Once he threatened to burn a boy's head off unless he relented. He first tied him to the floor, then took swingle tow, the refuse of beaten flax, made it into a rope, tied it around the boy's neck and laying the ends at some distance on the floor set fire to them. Before the flames reached the boy's head he yielded. His father's family was large and larder lean. Often the mother took the water in which meat had been boiled or vegetables, and crumbed into it coarse rye bread. A large wooden bowl was placed in the middle of the floor and each child given a wooden spoon and liberty to eat. Master Oliver in youth was apprenticed to Squire Ward of Pond Hill, where he learned to make the reeds used in hand looms, and in his latter days he gave his whole attention to this. As county surveyor he established an exact record. When Tomlinson bridge was thought of he was called for measurements. In dividing and distributing estates he had no peer, but carried his sovereignty under his hat, and came near losing his place by opposing right to arbitrary law; m. twice, divorced from first wife, no date; (2) wife he lived with until she d. in an old red house which stood on the corner of Henry Bradley's garden. In latter years he carried the first silver watch owned in No. Haven, once belonged Gov. Saltonstall, now in possession of Mrs. Josiah Todd.

HULL.

[FROM REV. R. W. B. HULL, D.D.]

595 Lexington Ave., }
NEW YORK, Sept. 22, 1877. }

GEO. F. TUTTLE, Esq.,

My Dear Sir:—In connection with the subject of our late conversation concerning the two distinct families of Hull and Hulls, I will jot down the following notes to show that the family of Hulls, alias Hulse, was distinct and not having a common origin with that of Hull.

On the roll of arms, temp. Edward II, I find the name of Lord Richard Hulses. Seire, Richard de Hulses d Canterbury. Azure, an eagle displayed. Argent, a baton gules, showing illegitimacy. I further find that this Lord Richard Hulses held lands in capite of the King at Papesworth, Canterburyshire, 1308.

The family of Huls, Hulls, Hulles or Hulse, spelt indifferently in the four ways, and sometimes Hullys, flourished in the counties of Cheshire, Berks and Bucks, and generally had their arms charged with the "pile."

The family of Hull, Hulle and sometimes with the alias, Hall, flourished principally in Devon, Somerset, Dorset and Cornwall, and had their arms charged with the "Talbot's head," "water budget" or the "fleur de lis."

You will find the name of Arnold Hulls among the incorporators of the London charter, 1609; the second original charter. Andrew Hulls or Holles, LL.D., chancellor of Sarum and archbishop of Wells, 1450. Miles Hulls was the kinsman and executor of the will of Rev. Loras Bland, rector of Popeshall to Nats in 1667. These last given names are suggestions as connected with your family.

There were several by the name of Hulls among the original emigrants to New England. Andrew Hulls and his wf. Katharine came from London in 1635, and settled in N. Hav. Richard Hull settled in Boston, and removed to W. Haven. John Hulls was of Dorchester in 1632, and Dr. John Hulls, your ancestor, was of Stratford, 1661, and probably a son of one of the above, if not himself an original emigrant.

Mr. Low says that in the Planters' List the family of Andrew Hulls is down as consisting of four members. When was that Planters' List made? If after the death of of Andrew (1640) then there were three children, viz.: wife, two daughters, Hannah and Sarah, and a third child, perhaps a son (posthumous?), and the Dr. John, afterwards of Stratford. Mr. Savage conjectures that Andrew and Richard were brothers, so that he must have observed the spelling of their name with the final "s."

Mr. Low further says that John, the s. of Richard, was the executor of his bro.-in-law, Edmund Dorman of Derby, in 1683. Now, if the legal papers show the spelling of the name to be Hulls, then I would conclude that this John was identical with Dr. John, who was bap. at New Haven, Feb. 20, 1641, and a son of Richard, and that Andrew was a bro. of Richard, and his baptismal name perpetuated in the fam. of his nephew, Dr. John.

Of John Hulls of Dorchester, Mass., I note the following: He was free, Aug. 7, 1632, and of the Artillery Co., 1638. Mr. Savage, in noting his d. "At Boston, July 28, 1666," has evidently confounded him with Robert Hull of Boston (f. of John, the Mint Master), who d. on that date. Cothren tells us that John of Dorchester rem. to Windsor, Conn. On the Dorchester records this John Hulls had grants of land in 1632, 1635 and 1636, and then disappears from said records, from which I conjecture that he was bro. of Andrew and Richard; the whole fam. finally settling in Conn. abt. 1639-40.

My conclusion is that there were three distinct families:

1. Andrew Hulls of New Haven; Richard Hulls, do, and John Hulls of Windsor were three bros. from Cheshire or Derbyshire.
2. Robert Hull of Boston and John Hull of Newbury, two bros. from Liecestershire.
3. George Hull of Fairfield and Joseph Hull of Weymouth, two bros. from Somersetshire.

King, in his History of Cheshire, gives the arms of Huls of Hulse as three "piles," and says the Hulses, "a great name once in these parts," were seated at Hadley in Cheshire.

This family of Hulse or Hulls of Cheshire, says Lyson, can be traced back to Sir William, who married the heiress of Nowbury, of Nowbury, in the year 1300.

Sir Hugh Hulls, of a younger branch of this family, was appointed Justice of the King's Bench, in 1389, and confirmed in that position, T. Hon. V., 1413. I find on examination of the year books that his name is always spelt Huls or Hulls.

The Hulses of Clive, in Cheshire, of the same stock, temp. Edw. IV, 1461-1483, married the heiresses of Clive and of Raven. They were seated at Elworth and became extinct by the death of Rev. John Hulse, founder of the Hulsean Prize in Cambridge.

Thomas Hulse or Hulls, Esq., of Nowbury and Astley had numerous issus by two wives. He was burned at Nowbury in 1588. His eldest son Hugh had a daughter bap. at Nowbury in 1591, says Lyson, after which date there is no trace of the family on the registers—what became of this numerous progeny?

For the purposes of genealogical investigation I would presume that the brothers Andrew, Richard and John Hulls of Conn. were of a younger branch of this Hulls alias Hulse family of Cheshire, and that your ancestor, Dr. John Hulls, probably gave the name of Derby or Cheshire to one or both of the Conn. towns in remembrance of the county seat of his ancestors.

I am, sir, very sincerely yours, etc.,

R. W. B. HULL.

HULSE AND HULL.

Hulse, a town and manor in Gt. Budworth, Cheshire, probably from the German, Hultz, a wood.

Hull, the old British or Saxon for a hill. In Welch, Hull means a rough, uneven place.

Soon after the Conquest many localities in the west of Eng. had this name of Hull, and probably gave name to as many distinct families as there were high and prominent land-marks bearing the name. In Cheshire, Eng., Hulse and Hulls. In the Marches and in Wales, Hulls would prob. be the contracted form of Hullson; it being there the custom to use the contraction "s" for the English word Son, as in Roberts, Evans, Johns, Richards, Williams, etc.—the English style being Robertson, Evanson, Johnson, etc. etc. So that it is highly probable that there are in England distinct families bearing the name Hulls and Hulse, derived from distinct sources, some from the local name and some from the patronymic and spelling their name indifferently—either way. Why the family of Hulls in Conn. dropped the final s and thus (no doubt unwittingly) totally changed their patronymic, it would be curious to discover. Dr. John and his sons retained the final s till the middle of the last century. Both families have an alias in Old England. Hull had the alias Hill, Hulse had the alias Hulls; but never do I find that Hulls had the alias, Hull, until this case of the Conn. family turns up, which I think was merely the result of indifference on the part of the family, forced upon them and then accepted by them as the end of repeated errors among survivors, parish clerks and town officials.—Com. by Rev. R. W. B. Hull, D. D.

Was senator in the state legislature from 1793 to 1805, when he resigned on being appointed by Thomas Jefferson Gov. of Mich. Territory. In Feb., 1812, war being imminent and Indians hostile, twelve hundred Ohio Volunteers, with 300 men of the 4th U. S. Inf., were ordered to the western frontier post (Detroit). Gov. Hull being in Washington, was asked to take command of those troops, which he declined; but the officer appointed being taken sick, Gov. H. consented to lead the troops to Detroit with the sole object of protecting the inhabitants of the territory against the Indians. He opened a road through the wilderness, two hundred miles, to Detroit, and when he arrived was ordered to invade Canada with a force wholly inadequate and without the support of any naval power whatever, though he had insisted upon its necessity, and had the pledge of the government that he should be so supported. The campaign was a failure; Detroit was lost, and Gov. H. was held accountable for disasters caused by others. [See (1) Request of Trial of Gov. Hull at Albany, 1814, pub. by Eastburn, Kirk & Co., N. Y., 1814; (2) Memoirs of the Campaign of 1812 by Wm. Hull, pub. by Pine & Green, Boston, 1824; (3) Military and Civil Life of Gen. Hull, by his daughter, Mrs. Campbell and his grandson, James F. Clarke, N. Y., D. Appleton & Co., 1848.] The public opinion of this event was formed from the statements of government editors and military men, who, like Lewis Cass, had risen on the downfall of Gen. Hull. Copies of documents necessary to his vindication he was unable to procure from the War Department until 1824, and even now the school histories have it, and the popular belief is that he was a coward and a traitor.

Oliver Brown, a beef contractor with Hull's army at Detroit was accompanied by his son John, who circulated freely among the officers and soldiers and overheard (then a boy of 12 yrs.) many of the conversations concerning Gen. Hull and his position. Of Gen. Cass, then a Capt. under Hull, he saw much, and heard such mutinous talk from him, McArthur and other officers, as would have branded them as mutineers had it been known in Washington, and he had an ill opinion of Cass ever afterwards. He believed that Gen. Hull was forced into the false position which led to his surrender by the bad conduct of his subordinate officers. He d. Nov. 25, 1825, in Derby, Conn., while on a visit. ### SEDGWICK.

Prof. Adam Sedgwick, of Cambridge University, England, the renowned geologist, writes to Gen. Charles F. Sedgwick of Sharon, Conn. The clan settled in early times among the mountains which form the borders of Yorkshire, Lancashire and Westmoreland. And all the Sedgwicks in England can trace their ancestry to these mountains. The name is German, and means village of victory, probably, a place where our rude ancestral Saxons or Danes drove out the Celtic tribes into the remote recesses of the Cambrian mountains, where we meet with many Celtic names to this day. The name of Sedgwick was, I believe, a corruption given to explain the meaning of a name the real import of which was quite forgotten. The word sedge is not known in the northern districts of our Island, and the plant itself does not exist in our valleys, but a branch of our clan settled in low marshy regions in Lancashire, and first adopted the modern spelling, and at the same time two bundles of sedge (with the leaves drooping like the ears of a corn sheaf) as the family crest. This branch was never numerous, and is, I believe now almost extinct. Indeed, the Sedgwicks never seem (at least in England) to flourish away from their native mountains. If you remove them to a low country they droop and die away in a few generations. A still older crest, and one which suits the history of the race, is an eagle with spread wings. The arms most commonly borne by the Sedgwicks are composed of a red Greek cross with five bells attached to the bars. I am too ignorant of heraldic terms to describe the shield correctly. I believe, however, that this is the shield of the historic branch. There is another branch to the south of the mountains. All the border clans suffered greatly in the wars of York and Lancaster. After the reformation they leaned generally to the puritanic side, and many of them served in Cromwell's army. From the reformation to the latter part of the last century our border counties enjoyed great prosperity. Small estates, the proprietors living thereon, happy, independent yeomanry. The manufacture of wool from the flocks of sheep on the neighboring mountains produced a humble affluence. All this has been destroyed by change of manners and machinery, and a dismal change has taken place. It is now a very poor country, most of the family estates sold to strangers.—Hollister's History of Conn.

Arriving at Mr. Stoddard's, he made known his object, and not having time for courtship, Mr. S. took him into the room where his daughters were assembled and introduced him to Mary, Christine, Sarah, Rebecca and Hannah, and retired. Mr. Mix lost no time, but addressing the eldest, Mary, stated that he had settled in Wethersfield, that he wanted a wife, and concluded by offering her his hand and heart. She blushing wanted time to consider. He would, he said, retire into the next room and smoke a pipe with her father while she made up her mind. Time up, she came in and wanted more time. It was arranged that she should communicate her decision by letter. A few weeks afterwards he received the following epistle:

STOWE.

Stowe is a Saxon word meaning place. Localities of this name are very numerous in England, including many with prefixes and affixes, among which are Stowe near Gainsboro, which has a very ancient church in the Norman style, and Stow Park.

Stow, a pleasant village in Lancashire.

Stow Randolph, and Stow Hall, between Ely and Lynn. Stow Hall is a stately mansion belonging to Sir Thomas Hare.

Stow Hill, near Litchfield, where Johnson wrote a large part of his Lives of the Poets.

Godstow, the nunnery where fair Rosamond Clifford was wooed by Henry II.

Maristow, a monastery founded by Lady Godiva.

Christ-Stow, Playstow, Chepstow, Elstow, Where John Bunvan was born, Instow, on the South Devon R. R., Hibaldstow, Dingestow. Stow Earket, near Ipswich, famous for its malt and the Milton tree, planted by John Milton at the Parsonage while studying with Dr. Young, the puritan. Stow Ninechurches, between London and Birmingham, in whose church is a fine monument to the daughter of Lord Latimer. Stowel Park, in Gloucester Co. Stowe in Lincolnshire, where Robert Greathed was born. Stoweloft Hall, between Bently and Hadley, Stowford (Stafford).

Stowe, in Bucks; the once princely seat of the Duke of Buckingham, the gardens of which were begun when regularity was in fashion, and the original boundary is still preserved on account of its magnificence; for around the whole circuit of between three and four miles, there was a very broad gravelled walk, and planted with rows of trees, and open either to the Park or to the country. Within the walk, the modern English style in which formality is avoided, is followed.

A description in the Ency. Brit., of this celebrated Park, closes as follows: "Magnificence and splendor are the characteristics of Stowe. It is like one of those places celebrated in antiquity, which are devoted to the purposes of religion, and filled with sacred groves, hallowed fountains, and temples dedicated to several deities; the resort of distant nations, and the object of veneration to half the heathen world. This pomp is at Stowe, blended with beauty, and the place is equally distinguished by its amenity and grandeur."

The name is also common in Scotland. Instance, Stow on the banks of the Gala Water.

The name was early in use as a family name or surname. In 1320 Sir John Abel let unto Henry Stow, draper of London, the great house called Cold Harbour and appurtenances within the gate, with the key.—Stow's Survey of London.

In 1332 Edward II. presented John de Stow with the church living at Rothersfield. ibid.

John Stow, a Benedictive Monk of Norwich, 1440, wrote various collections much cited by Cains in Hist. of Cambridge.—Fuller.

John Stow, in list of gentry of Oxfordshire, 1234. ibid.

John Stow, in list of gentry of Berkshire, 1471.

Stow was a young scholar at Oxford in Queen Mary's time (1553–8).

There was a family in London, the first of whom was Thomas Stow, tallow chandler of St. Michael's Parish, Cornhill, who d. 1526. His will is recorded in the births of the London Register. He was father of Thomas Stow, who d. 1559, leaving sons John and Thomas.

John Stow, b. about 1525; the famous antiquary. Author of the Chronicles of England; Survey of London, etc.; d. April 7, 1605, a. about 80. Being in indigent circumstances some time before he d., King James granted letters patent, dated March 8, 1664, which D'Israeli thought worthy of a place among his Curiosities of Literature.

"James by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, etc. To our well beloved subjects, greeting: Whereas our loving subject, John Stowe (a very aged and worthy citizen of our city of London), this five and forty years has to his great charge, and with neglect of his ordinary means of maintenance (for the general good as well as posterity as of the present age), compiled and published divers necessary books, and chronicles, and therefore we, in recompense of these, his painful labors, and for encouragement to the like, have, in our royal inclination, been pleased to grant our letters patent under our great seal of England, dated the 8th of March, 1603–4, thereby authorizing him, the said John Stow and his deputies, to collect among our loving subjects their voluntary contribution and kind gratuities, as by the said letters patent, more at large may appear; now seeing that our sayd patents (being but one of themselves) cannot be shown forth in divers places or parishes at once (as the occasion of his speedy putting them into execution may require), we have therefore thought expedient in this unusual manner to recommend his cause unto you; having already in our own person and of our special grace, begun the largesse for the example of others. Given at our palace at Westminster."

What success Stow had in begging under this permit of his majesty we know not. He d. in about a year, and his widow Margaret erected over his remains a terra cotta figure of him sitting in a chair and reading. This monument was one of the few relics of the past spared by the great fire of London in 1666.

Prof. Calvin E. Stowe, who has been to London three times, always visits the monument of the Antiquary in the church yard of St. Margaret's, and Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe says the figure bears a striking likeness to her husband. The old lady who takes care of the church, calls the figure "the great old gentleman," and puts a bouquet of flowers in his hand every Christmas. He left four daughters and perhaps other children. It is thought, with show of probability, that John Stow of Roxbury was a grandson of the Antiquary's brother Thomas.

Col. Chester, in his records of Westminster Abbey, names Joanna, dau. of Mr. Stow of Canterbury, who m. Mr. Agur; (2) Nov. 24, 1666, Rev. James Meigs, D. D., of Oxford, who d. Jan. 22, 1672; (3) in Westminster Abbey, John Upton of London, merch., Aug. 7, 1673. A sister of Joanna Stow m. Rev. Charles Gibbs, D. D., Prebendary of Westminster Abbey, who taught school at Canterbury. She d. 1710 and was buried in the Middle aisle of the Abbey.

John Stow from Hawkhurst, Kent Co., England, embarked April 9, 1635, on ship "Elizabeth," bound for New England; a. 40. (He may have come with Winthrop in 1630 and returned.) In same ship came Rachel Bigg,* "a. 6," figure wanting on one side, (mother of John Stow's wf.); Patience Foster, a. 40, Hopestill Foster, a. 14. The will of Rachel Bigg, dated Nov. 17, 1646, one of the earliest on record in Suffolk Co., Mass., s.-in-law John Stow; execr, gives dau., Elizabeth Stow, her silver pot.

The will of John Bigg, Alderman of Maidstone, Kent, Eng., made 1640, proved 1642, gives legacies to the poor of Cranbrook and Biddenden; names bro. Peter Masters, bro. Smallhope Bigg, mother in New England, "my bro. Stow and his children—Thomas, John, Nathaniel and Samuel and two daus." All his land in New England to be divided between Hopestill Foster and the six children of John Stow; names cousin James Bates, Goodman Beale, Clement Bates, William Bachelor, John Moore, Thomas Bridgen, and cousin Betts, all in New England, and went from Kent Co.

Sept. 10, 1653, Hopestill Foster, on one side, and Thomas, Nathaniel and Samuel Stow agreed to settle all disputes about the wills of Smallhope and John Bigg.

* The Biggs were settled in Kent before the conquest, and have held a prominent position in the county for nine or ten centuries. The manor of Stowting, Kent Co., Eng., was given in 1040 to Christ church, Canterbury, by Algeric Bigge, and in the Domesday Book, 1066, it is termed "Archbishop's lands." In the reign of Edward the Confessor (1041-1066) Algeric Bigg gave a part of Bodesham to the Abbey of St. Augustine, on condition that Wade, his knight, should possess it during his life.

The "Minnie Stowe" is a beautiful new yacht which is devoted to mission purposes in Boston harbor. It is named after the daughter of the chaplain of the Sailors' Bethel. The missionary who commands it was a wild young sailor who was converted at the Bethel and who determined to give himself to efforts in behalf of the unconverted sailors who from time to time enter the harbor in vessels. A grist mill was maintained by him and his son Joseph until 1840, when Joseph sold it. It is still in use, though not as flourishing as formerly.

Henry represented his father as being of English, and his mother of Scotch nativity or parentage. There was long a tradition in the New Jersey branch of Joseph's [6] descendants that their ancestor came from "North of the Tweed," and Mr. Barber published it in his *Hist. Col. of N. II. Payne Pettibone, b. Dec. 23, 1813; res. Wyoming; m. Oct. 3, 1837, Caroline M., dau. of Wm. Swetland, b. Oct. 17, 1820. To Mr. Pettibone we are indebted for this record of the descendants of Henry Tuttle. In a letter to the compiler he says: "My grandfather, Joseph Tuttle, taking me to his home in my infancy, on the death of my father, and giving me an even chance in the family home for such training as the circumstances allowed, especially the benefit of a Christian home with its resulting influences, has had much to do with deepening my interest in the family record." The following sketch is mostly from Munsell's Hist. of Luzerne and Wyoming Counties, pub. 1880:

He lived with his grandfather Tuttle until he was fourteen. Afterwards as tavern boy and clerk at Tunkhannock he was subjected to very bad associations, but was so firmly grounded in moral principle that he kept himself unstained. Before he was eighteen he was offered a business copartnership with Col. Montanye, but declined, and returned for a short time to farm labor at his grandfather Tuttle's. Soon afterwards he accepted a position with Swetland & Baldwin of Wyoming, and in 1834 became a partner with Mr. Swetland, and so continued until the death of the latter in 1864. As executor of the will of Mr. S. he managed his estate for fifteen years so as to greatly increase its value.

The integrity of his character, his great business success, and his hearty sympathies with his fellow men, and solicitude for their material and moral advancement have led Mr. Pettibone into a large number of business, educational and religious enterprises, in all of which he has taken a prominent part. Among these may be named the old Pittston Bank; the Wyoming Terra Cotta Works; director of First National Bank of Pittston, and Wyoming National Bank, and the Miner's Savings Bank of Wilkesbarre; Pres. of the Wilkesbarre Savings Bank. Of the Wyoming Shovel Works, himself and son are the sole proprietors; director of the Washington Life Insurance Co. of N. Y.; Pres. Board of Trustees of the Wyoming Seminary; of the W. Bible Soc., the W. Camp Meeting Assoc.; of the Forty Fort Cemetery Assoc.; Trustee of the Drew Theo. Sem., and of the Wesleyan Univ. at Middletown, Conn., resigning the latter office from inability to attend the meetings.

In 1844, on com. with Gen. Wm. S. Ross and Jonathan J. Slocum, appointed by the State of Penn. to sell the Delaware div. of the Penn. Canal, which was satisfactorily accomplished. From 1854 to 1863, he was treasurer of the Lackawanna & Bloomsburg R. R., during the most trying period of its financial history, from which severe strain and pressure he retired as soon, (but no sooner) as he could do so with safety to the stockholders. He was afterwards elected a director of the company, and held that position until the road was consolidated with the Delaware, Lack. & West. R. R. He has refused all offices except of a local nature.

In 1864 he was on committee to finish the Wyoming monument and improve the grounds which had been very much neglected. This work he accomplished with his accustomed success. In 1878 he was chairman of the com. on finances of the Centennial Memorial Assoc., and to him was largely due the success of that occasion. At this time he entertained at his residence, Pres. Hayes, his family and cabinet, Gov. Hartranft of Penn., wife and suite, and many other prominent men of the State and nation. The following spring Mrs. Hayes sent to Mrs. Pettibone a case of rare flowers as an expression of her pleasant recollections of the visit.

Among other affairs of a business nature, Mr. Pettibone and wife are owners of a large Sugar plantation, where the experiment is being tried of keeping negro laborers contented by prompt payment and fair treatment.

As early as twelve or fourteen years of age he received lasting religious impressions, though he did not join the church until 1848, since when he has been continually in the official board, serving as leader, steward, trustee, S. S. supt. and delegate to the General Conference.

The Wyoming M. E. church, which was dedicated July 18, 1883, was the gift of the Pettibone family to that society. It is a beautiful edifice, costing $25,000. Of this sum Mr. Pettibone and wife contributed 4-5, and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Swetland, 1-5. Chil. of Payne and Caroline Pettibone: 1, MARY S., b. Oct. 5, 1838; d. Dec. 6, 1844. 2, FRANCES, b.
